

Sol Ortega was born in Lima, Peru and raised in Kissimmee, Florida. She is a first-generation college student and holds a B.A. in Political Science with a minor in Spanish and Latin American studies from the University of Florida. Sol knows first-hand how decisions made in Washington can impact communities like hers.

Sol has a strong legislative background having worked in Congress for five years. She served as the Deputy Director of Engagement for Senate Democratic Minority Leader, Charles E. Schumer. In her role, she served as a liaison for the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and various national advocacy groups and the Leader's office elevating the voices of underrepresented communities. Prior to the Senate she worked in the House of Representatives for Congressman Darren Soto (FL-09). Most recently Sol served as the Deputy Director for Latino Engagement for Building Back Together working to promote President Biden's legislative agenda with national and local Latino groups.

She now works as a Senior Advisor for Public Engagement at the White House, advancing the Biden Administration's commitment to the Latino community.

Sol is an alumni of the Congressional Hispanic Leadership Institute (CHLI) and the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute (CHCI).
