A Reference Tool That Reflects a United Purpose

It is an honor to address you on this very special occasion as we present the first edition of our BizData Book—a project into which we have invested significant time and effort, and which comes to life today thanks to the commitment and shared vision of our Institution and our business community.

The BizData Book is more than a data compendium; it is, without a doubt, a reference guide to be consulted regularly, as it reflects the productive fabric that drives our economy. It is proof of the talent, investment, and innovation that distinguish Puerto Rico's private sector. Each company represented here—every statistic and every data point collected—serves as a testament to the strength, capacity, and diversity of our entrepreneurial ecosystem. I invite you to browse its pages with curiosity, to use it strategically, to uncover business opportunities and valuable contacts, as well as potential partnerships and collaborative spaces. May every page inspire conversations, agreements, and projects that propel our economy, free enterprise, and the well-being of our society.

The BizData Book is not an isolated achievement; it is the result of shared effort and continuous work carried out throughout the year by our internal staff, our editorial team, and external collaborators who helped make this project a reality, together with the leadership that came before me. For this reason, I wish to express special recognition to our immediate past president, Luis Pizarro, Esq., and Ramón Pérez Blanco, Esq., also a previous president of our guild. Both of them pledged a strong commitment, leadership, and vision, all fundamental factors in shaping the early stages of this project. Their leadership and volunteer services on behalf of our Institution, along with their deep respect for the business sector, laid the groundwork that allows us to celebrate this publication today with pride—pride for our Institution, for Puerto Rico, and for all who believe in free enterprise as a driving force for progress. The outcome of this effort is a clear example that teamwork produces results and strengthens our identity as a business guild, reminding us that when we act united and with a shared purpose, our voice is amplified and our impact multiplies.

MARGARET

For those who are not yet part of our centuries-old Institution, this publication offers a glimpse of the value of belonging to the most representative business organization in Puerto Rico. By joining the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce, you become part of an active network of entrepreneurs committed to defending free enterprise, competitiveness, and the social and economic development of our island. It is an opportunity to give and to receive—to build, influence, learn, and open doors. It is in this spirit that I extend a respectful and enthusiastic invitation to join us in championing free enterprise. Our doors are open to those who wish to strengthen the private sector and be part of a community working with determination toward a better future for Puerto Rico and for all.

On behalf of our Board of Directors, our Council of Past Presidents, our more than 30 affiliated associations, our business members, and on my own behalf, it is with great honor, gratitude, and pride that I present this first edition of the BizData Book—with the conviction that it will serve as an essential reference tool, one that will travel across Puerto Rico and beyond, year after year.

MESSAGE

from the Executive Director of the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce

A Compass for Turbulent Times

Peter Drucker, one of the most influential thinkers in the history of business management, warned at the end of the 20th century that “the greatest danger in times of turbulence is not the turbulence; it is to act with yesterday’s logic.” He also stated that knowledge is the only asset that appreciates over time. Drucker’s vision is therefore as relevant, if not more so, in the new business landscape of economic, technological, and social transformation. At the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce (PRCC), we wholeheartedly embrace these ideas. We maintain that today’s business leaders need, more than ever, tools that allow them to make decisions with agility, precision, and a forward-looking vision.

It is in this spirit that we embarked on the adventure of building the BizData Book as a strategic commitment to understanding the business ecosystem as a development asset. This economic and business guide, the first edition of which we are presenting this year, compiles up-to-date data on Puerto Rico’s productive sectors, demographic trends, export and import capacities, public and private investment, and other information curated specifically for our business community. The information has been organized with clarity and rigor to become a key resource for our business owners, officials, and community leaders.

This project fully embodies the pillars of our strategic plan. It directly contributes to strengthening the private sector by aligning the business ecosystem under a shared, evidence-based vision. It fosters entrepreneurship by providing new businesses with key information for positioning and decision-making. It enhances the country’s competitiveness by enabling comparative analysis, strategic planning, and sector-specific diagnostics.

Furthermore, the BizData Book strengthens our ability to influence public policy. The data contained in this publication will allow us to articulate demands, defend proposals, and participate more effectively in the dialogue between the private sector and government. From a strategic alliance perspective, this initiative represents a point of convergence for businesses, academia, government, and civil society, all of whom are invited to contribute to a shared vision.

For our members, this publication represents a concrete value proposition. In addition to advertising visibility in a prestigious institutional medium, it also allows them to participate as relevant players in the conversation about Puerto Rico’s economic development. In times when attention spans are limited, the endorsement of the PRCC guarantees credibility and reach.

There is also a fundamental educational component. This project complements our training and development efforts by offering a tool that strengthens analytical skills and informed decision-making at all levels of the organization.

As Drucker argued, we cannot navigate the challenges of the present with the maps of the past. The BizData Book 2025 is a modern compass for complex times. At the PRCC, we will continue to champion knowledge as a driver of transformation.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

Ink, Data, and the Spirit of Collaboration

It was an ordinary afternoon, as I was returning from my job as a communications professor at Inter American University, Bayamón Campus, when I received a call from Liza García Vélez, Esq., the executive director of the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce. She shared the Chamber's vision to develop a publication that would serve both as an institutional yearbook and as a compendium of the organization's major initiatives. They envisioned a project that would not only summarize data and achievements but also offer added value through statistical insight and showcase the partnerships between the business community and the non-profit sector.

At first glance, it seemed like a straightforward task: compile existing information and organize it for publication. However, we soon realized the true potential of the project—and the gap it could fill. From that realization, the BizData Book 2025 was born, along with the challenge of assembling the most competent and committed team possible. In record time, we produced a book that, under different circumstances, would have taken more than a year to complete.

From the outset, we aimed to create an English-language publication that could serve as a calling card for Puerto Rico in international economic missions. Journalist José Alvarado, one of the island's most prominent writers and researchers in that language, joined the editorial team. Attorney Eylin Fortin, supported by Vivian Crespo, assumed the coordination of the data tables, information gathering, and overall project management with impeccable precision. Juanita Otero was responsible for developing the electronic forms used to collect information.

Every major project requires a strong sales force, and Elena Díaz and her team ensured the financial viability of this publication. Graphic design was equally essential.

The expertise of Jean-Marie Sánchez and Dennis Chaparro guaranteed a high-quality editorial design, allowing each collaborator to focus confidently on their area of specialization.

Once the editorial and commercial phases were underway, the next step was printing. Print 1 was the first printing company to respond to our call, offering its collaboration to help us achieve the high-quality product we present today. For storage and distribution, we relied on the steadfast support of Island Wide and our friend Pedro Rosaly.

None of this would have been possible without the dedication of the Chamber of Commerce team: its president, Margaret Ramírez Báez, Esq.; the outgoing president, Luis Pizarro Otero, Esq.; the executive director, Liza García Vélez, Esq.; her executive assistant, Enid González; the director of marketing and sales, Sandra González; and all the staff who, almost without realizing it, became immersed in this fascinating world of publishing. I am also deeply grateful to the companies that shared their data; it is thanks to the information collected that this type of publication is even possible.

It has been a long time since I have worked with such a committed, professional, and enthusiastic team. We hope you enjoy this first edition of the BizData Book 2025, and that it stands as a testament to the power of collaboration. We are already preparing the 2026 edition—with new goals, more data, and the same passion for Puerto Rico.

LETTER FROM THE DATA EDITOR

Statistics for Prosperity

BizData Book is a reference publication that includes fact-filled listings of companies by industry category as well as market data and special reports that can be used to make informed decisions regarding business in Puerto Rico. Our mission is to provide professionals and businesses with a reliable guide for growth and strategic planning.

Our editorial process consists of collecting information from multiple sources, including data provided by companies and gleaned from public records and websites. Each list is based on rigorous research and includes data from more than 1,500 companies in over 60 industries. We feature more than 90 exclusive lists detailing contact information, leadership, network links, employee counts, and annual gross volume (revenue).

The process began by sending a detailed questionnaire to companies operating in Puerto Rico, followed by numerous phone calls and emails to complete the data collection phase. We then curated the information sent in by companies and organized it into a structured system of rankings and lists.

An effort was made to include all companies that are part of Puerto Rico's economic ecosystem, regardless of their size or sector. However, to qualify for the listings, companies must have submitted complete questionnaires that could be analyzed according to BizData Book's criteria. In this edition, several well-known companies may not appear on the lists, or may appear on unranked lists, because they either submitted incomplete questionnaires or did not provide any data.

General lists are organized by industry, offering detailed classifications by size, revenue, and sector-specific criteria. Special rankings such as Puerto Rico's 100 Leading Companies listing are based on gross volume (revenue) and include businesses that are 100% locally owned and generate annual revenues that exceed $5 million. Related tables, such as Puerto Rico's Leading Family-Owned Companies, spotlight key players in this segment. We also publish a Puerto Rico's Leading SMEs (Pymes) listing, following Puerto Rico's classification for small and medium-sized enterprises: annual revenue under $3 million and fewer than 25 employees.

We sincerely thank all the companies that contributed their data for this edition of BizData Book 2025. Your collaboration with accurate and up-to-date information was essential in making this project a reality.

We invite all businesses to participate in our next edition and continue strengthening Puerto Rico's capacity to use statistics for prosperity.

PUERTO RICO

OUR GOVERNMENT

Puerto Rico, officially known as the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico (Estado Libre Asociado), operates under a republican form of government modeled after the United States. Power is divided into three branches—executive, legislative, and judicial—ensuring a system of checks and balances. The city of San Juan is the seat of government.

The Legislative Assembly is bicameral, with a Senate and a House of Representatives that craft local laws. At the municipal level, Puerto Rico is divided into 78 municipalities, each led by an elected mayor and municipal legislature, creating a decentralized structure that keeps local government close to its communities.

Puerto Rico also elects a Resident Commissioner to the U.S. Congress. While this unique position carries voice and influence in the House of Representatives, its voting power is limited, reflecting the island's complex political status.

Historically, Puerto Rico transitioned from more than 400 years under Spanish rule to becoming a U.S. territory in 1898 after the Spanish-American War. In 1952, it adopted its own constitution, formalizing the Commonwealth status that continues today.

The island's relationship with the United States defines much of its political and economic landscape. Puerto Ricans are U.S. citizens, subject to federal laws and oversight, but the island lacks voting representation in Congress and does not participate in presidential elections. This hybrid arrangement shapes Puerto Rico's unique standing: local autonomy paired with federal ties, a balance that continues to influence both governance and business.

OUR GEOGRAPHY

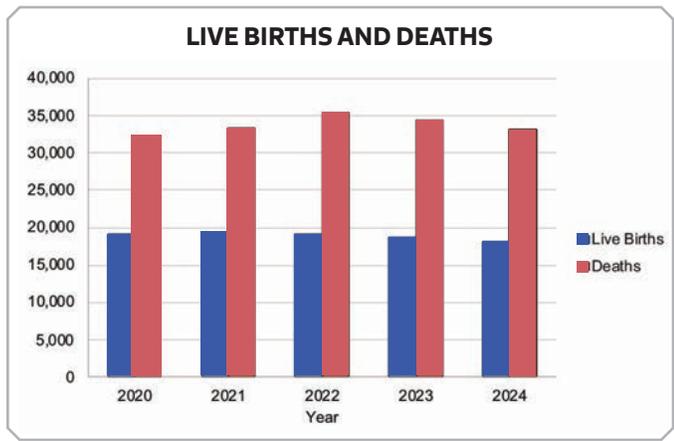

Puerto Rico is a compact yet diverse island in the Caribbean, with a total area of about 3,515 square miles (9,104 km²)—roughly the size of Jamaica and slightly smaller than the U.S. state of Connecticut. Despite its modest size, the island offers striking geographic contrasts that shape both lifestyle and business opportunities.

The highest point is Cerro Punta in the central mountain range, rising to 4,390 feet (1,338 meters) above sea level. At the other extreme, the lowest point is the Caribbean coastline, where Puerto Rico meets the sea. These elevations create microclimates that influence agriculture, renewable energy potential, and tourism.

Puerto Rico enjoys a tropical climate, with average temperatures ranging from 70°F (21°C) in the mountains to 85°F (29°C) on the coasts. Trade winds keep conditions comfortable year-round, while the rainy season runs from May to November. This climate sustains lush rainforests, fertile valleys, and vibrant coastal ecosystems that remain central to the island's economy.

To visualize its setting, a regional map places Puerto Rico at the heart of the Caribbean, strategically located between North and South America. A detailed municipal map further highlights its 78 municipalities, each with unique characteristics, industries, and traditions—a mosaic of opportunities within one island.

The decline in population, the aging of our community, and constant emigration are phenomena that directly impact all sectors of our society and economy. It is imperative that we address these challenges with a long-term vision, adopting public policies that promote talent retention, investment in innovation, and the creation of a favorable environment for current and future generations."

Puerto Rico's Economic Pulse Going Into 2026

It's a good time to look back at how Puerto Rico's economy has performed—and what that might mean for 2026

By José J. Villamil
 Founder & President of the Board of Directors

During 2025, both businesses and consumers navigated a landscape marked by uncertainty, shaped by a mix of internal and external risk factors. These challenges translated into higher operating costs, thinner profit margins, and tighter household budgets and financial fragility.

Yet, despite these headwinds, 2025—like any compelling story—also offers encouraging signs in several areas of economic activity. One of the year's standout features was the resilience of the labor market. During the first eight months of 2025, total nonfarm employment averaged 962,475 jobs, surpassing the 936,600 recorded back in 2010. Private-sector employment reached 763,875, representing a net gain of 10,462 jobs compared to the previous year. While job creation slowed somewhat, industries such as hospitality, education and health services, professional services, wholesale trade, and construction continued to drive growth and sustain the labor market's positive momentum.

Inflation remained a central concern through much of 2025, though pressures eased compared to the sharp increases of prior years. As of August, the headline inflation rate—measured by the annual growth in the Consumer Price Index—stood at 1.7%, well below the 4.8% annual growth in workers' average compensation during the same period. While this dynamic translated into modest gains in real earnings, persistent price pressures in key categories such as food, delivery and information services, motor vehicles and repairs, hospital services, recreation, and household furnishings continued to weigh on consumers' purchasing power and confidence.

From a business standpoint, inflation remains a key concern, particularly given the potential short-term impact of U.S. trade tariff policies on cost structures and operating margins. Factors such as higher shipping costs, domestic increases in electricity rates, and the added burden of import tariffs are already weighing on some operations—especially those that are financially fragile or have limited flexibility to absorb higher costs in a smaller, more competitive domestic market.

This issue is particularly relevant to the retail sector, where consumers are already adjusting their spending habits amid declining purchasing power and the fading of the $16 billion in federal stimulus funds injected into the economy in 2021. As liquidity from those programs dissipates, household spending has become more selective, with consumers prioritizing essentials and deferring some discretionary purchases.

The tourism industry maintained its solid performance in 2025, building on the momentum of the previous year. In 2024, hotel demand surged, driven largely by nonresident visitors—primarily U.S. residents, who accounted for about 92% of the 5.6 million tourists that year. During fiscal year 2025, passenger traffic through Luis Muñoz Marín International Airport reached 6.8 million, marking the fourth consecutive year above the pre-pandemic average of 4.3 million recorded between 2015 and 2019. Lodging demand also continued to rise for the fifth straight year, up 7% to 4.2 million stays. Sustained liquidity among U.S. consumers and favorable labor market conditions helped support employment and expansion within the tourism sector.

Servitization is a business strategy where a company transitions from selling products to offering a combination of products and services.

Still, the outlook is becoming more nuanced. Shifts in labor market conditions, rising household debt, persistent inflationary pressures, and growing uncertainty among U.S. consumers about the short-term economic outlook could moderate the pace of growth in the sector in 2026.

Despite the complexity of the current environment, the medium- to long-term outlook offers promising potential—if both the public and private sectors continue to push forward with strategic initiatives related to the commercial, pharma, aerospace, and medical device sectors.

Over the past twelve years, one of the government’s strategic pillars for growth has been the expansion of the small and medium-sized enterprise (SME) ecosystem. Between 2020 and 2025, the number of SME establishments rose from 44,470 to 50,049, led by gains in professional and business services, leisure and hospitality, trade, transportation and utilities, education and health services, and construction. A key catalyst has been the promotion of export-oriented service industries under Act 60, which has generated employment and fostered growth in knowledge-based sectors. This policy focus has helped nurture a vibrant information and technology services ecosystem, positioning Puerto Rico to leverage innovation and human capital as drivers of economic growth beyond 2026.

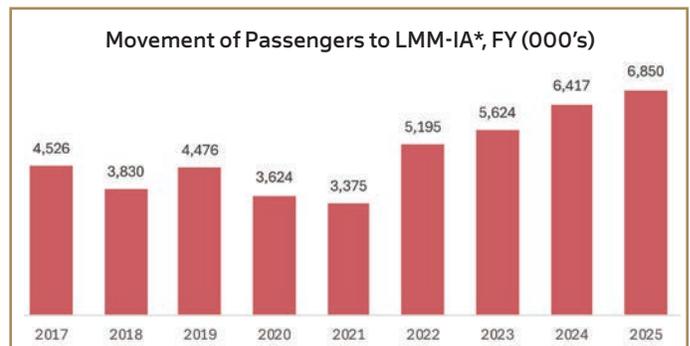

Equally important, the strength and liquidity of the island’s commercial banking sector in 2025 provided an additional foundation for growth. Strong balance sheets enhanced credit availability for businesses and consumers, facilitating continued investment and expansion across multiple sectors in 2026.

The manufacturing sector also stands to benefit from ongoing reshoring initiatives by U.S. companies in pharmaceuticals and medical devices. Planned investments—such as Amgen’s $650 million and 750 jobs, Terumo’s $45 million and 180 jobs, and Eli Lilly’s $1.2 billion and 100 jobs—are expected to generate both construction and high-skilled manufacturing employment over the next five years. Encouraging greater integration of SMEs into this value chain through “servitization” and specialized services could further expand business opportunities beyond 2026.

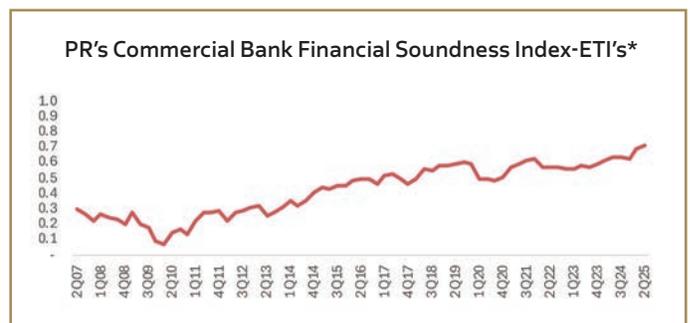

In the short term, however, the pace of growth will depend largely on the efficient disbursement of federal reconstruction funds. Delays tied to administrative requirements, rising construction costs, labor shortages, and elevated interest rates could dampen the near-term impact of these investments on job creation and economic activity.

As Puerto Rico enters 2026, its economy stands at a crossroads between resilience and uncertainty. The year 2025 showed encouraging signs of adaptation, yet the persistence of external risks, inflationary pressures, and uneven growth dynamics calls for measured optimism. Sustaining momentum will require prudent fiscal management, timely execution of public investment, and continued support for entrepreneurial initiatives.

In an environment still defined by volatility, caution remains not only prudent but necessary. Puerto Rico’s challenge—and opportunity—lies in maintaining the balance between building for the long term and managing short-term risks with clarity and discipline. ☺

P.R. Companies Seek Out Business in Foreign Lands

Government programs help local entrepreneurs face the challenges of exporting

By José Alvarado Vega
BizData Book

Working within a very competitive and often saturated island-bound consumer market, businesses in Puerto Rico who seek to maximize their growth usually have no choice but to expand their reach overseas. Many local businesses have been successful in tapping international markets as well as U.S. markets in the states, but others have not fared so well due to the lack of knowledge and experience in dealing with foreign trade practices and business etiquette.

The Puerto Rico and U.S. governments, in fact, have programs to help island-based businesses explore viable and advantageous trading options in other nations, including market information and government and business contacts in the countries targeted by local business owners for export. Local and federal governments also organize trade missions and fairs in different countries with the participation of business owners, who often come out of these events with valuable contacts and even export deals.

“For our businesses to grow, we can’t just look to domestic competition. In other words, companies must look outside of Puerto Rico for growth. That’s why the department is so focused on supporting export growth as a means of economic development,” Puerto Rico Economic Development and Commerce Secretary Sebastián Negrón Reichard told BizData Book during an interview at his Hato Rey office.

The government has yet to collect complete and exact data on the magnitude of exports from Puerto Rico-based businesses to the U.S. states and other countries. Nearly all products exported by Puerto Rico originate from manufacturing operations, which are dominated by multinational pharmaceutical and medical device corporations. According to data collected by the Puerto Rico Statistics Institute, the island exported $60.7 billion worth of goods during the fiscal year that ended on June 30, 2025. Exports by the “pharmaceutical products and medicines” industry made up about 72.3 percent of this amount, while exports by the “medical devices industry” constituted another 9.6 percent. These figures do not indicate whether the products were made by local manufacturers. The “2024 Economic Report to the Governor and the Legislative Assembly,” issued in 2025 by the Puerto Rico Planning Board, presents figures for the island’s real gross national product (GNP), which is made up of the total value of all final goods and services produced by a country’s residents, regardless of location, and adjusted for inflation. The report states that “sales to the rest of the world” totaled $100.8 billion in fiscal year 2024, including $2.19 billion in “goods” and $98.6 billion in “services.” These figures represent an increase of 9.6 percent and 5.5 percent, respectively, compared to the fiscal year 2023 figures.

Moreover, a 2022 report by the Puerto Rico Economic Development and Commerce Department (DDEC, by its Spanish initials) on the state of small and medium-sized businesses (Pymes, by its Spanish acronym), found that 4,412 businesses on the island exported their goods and services. Almost all of these enterprises – some 4,261 businesses or 97 percent – reported that they were Pymes employing fewer than 50 employees. The value of these exports came out to $15.1 billion, according to the report, which noted that exporting businesses generated 12,410 jobs.

While some Puerto Rico-based businesses have jumped over the proverbial pond by themselves and made it, local entrepreneurs are well advised to seek out help in developing strategies to export products and services to other countries, said Negrón, noting that exporting requires commitment and investments.

“We have programs to support these companies with incentives and strategic guidance so they can grow outside of Puerto Rico and have our support. That’s why we’re organizing trade missions,” the DDEC chief said. “We’re going to have one event a month, starting in January (2026), with an international focus. So, it’s a matter of using the department’s role to open doors outside of Puerto Rico, using federal funds for business training, to bring businesses to these international forums.”

Making it a mission

Negrón stressed the importance of trade missions, which are government-led trips where officials and business leaders visit a foreign country to promote trade and build international business relationships. They often involve activities like one-to-one meetings with potential partners, networking events, market briefings, and site visits to help businesses explore export opportunities, find buyers or distributors, and gain market insights.

In 2025, the agency organized trade missions to the Dominican Republic and Spain, while there are plans in 2026 for trade missions to Canada, Panamá, Costa Rica and El Salvador, he said, adding that there are also trade missions planned for the states of New York, Texas, Florida and Illinois. Many of these trips involve attending trade shows in these locations. [See Graph]

DDEC manages local funding from the U.S. Small Business Administration’s State Trade Expansion Program, or STEP, which helps small businesses overcome obstacles to exporting by providing grants to cover costs associated with entering and expanding into international markets. Small-sized business that have been registered as a company for at least a year, and are selling goods or services containing 51 percent or more of U.S. content, may be eligible.

“[STEP] finances part of our investments in the internationalization of companies,” Negrón said, noting that funds cover the travel expenses of entrepreneurs who participate in trade missions organized by DDEC. He noted that his agency’s PromoExport division provides analysis of markets in different countries to determine where certain products will be most in demand.

There are also incentives available for marketing products abroad and transportation costs for exports, the DDEC secretary said, noting that exporters can also benefit from preferential tax rates for manufacturing and the export of services. He stressed that local businesses may also benefit from the tariffs imposed on other countries by the Trump administration, as they give an edge to providers of products and services to sell them in the states.

Negrón said these efforts have been instrumental in the success of locally owned businesses in other countries. One such case is Valero, Inc., a Toa Baja-based company that is the first manufacturer of shopping carts in the Caribbean, which started out as a shopping cart repair operation. It now exports shopping carts to supermarkets in the Dominican Republic and the state of Florida, and it is in the process of entering other markets in the Caribbean and Central America.

“We began by doing it alone, but it was completely difficult. We did not achieve anything. Then we participated in a trade mission and we were treated differently. It is important not to give up,” Saray López Riera, president of Valero, Inc., said during the DDEC-organized “Puerto Rico Going Global” conference in August 2025.

The event featured success stories from other local businesses, such as Carmela canned sausages, which, besides the U.S. states, is exporting its products to the Philippines, South Korea and Dubai; and that of Toroverde Parks International, LLC, which operates theme parks and entertainment centers in Puerto Rico, and is in the process of opening a theme park in Spain.

Working along with DDEC, the local office of the U.S. Commercial Service, which operates under the U.S. Department of Commerce, has also been instrumental in helping Puerto Rico-based companies to sell their products and services in other countries.

And that's the role of the federal Department of Commerce here in Puerto Rico, which is to help companies achieve those goals and be able to sell their products and services in other international markets,” José F. The agency also coordinates meetings with industry and government decision makers in target markets, and provides exporters with legal and diplomatic assistance to win foreign government procurement contracts and deal with trade barriers and illegal practices.

Fees are charged according to the size of the business and the service rendered.

“When clients approach us, they are almost always determined that they want to export. Sometimes they're a little scared, and we tell them, 'Look, we'll help you, don't worry, these are the steps you need to take.' We meet with clients who are at different stages, from knowing nothing, to being a little more advanced, to having everything set up, ready to export, but not yet taking that step to enter that international market,” Burgos said, explaining that his office coordinates with agency representatives in other countries to provide customized services.

“One thing we always analyze, obviously, is how solid the company is,” he explained, noting that exporting requires a permanent commitment by a business, including the hiring of a customs broker when goods are involved. “I've had presidents and general managers meet with me and want to run both the company and the export side. I always say, 'I suggest you hire someone, or if you don't have one, assign someone to cover the export side,' because later, when those international sales start, the follow-up will take a lot of time, and they can't do both: run the company and export.”

Burgos, who noted that almost all of the companies he works with are small and medium-sized businesses, said that many local companies fail to enter international markets because they have not set up an effective marketing strategy, including emails and websites with a company domain and with links targeted to the countries in which business is being transacted. He said the agency provides a service called “Globalizing Your Website” to address these issues, which include setting up an effective social media presence.

Burgos said local business owners must also be aware of “global protocol” when conducting negotiations with their counterparts in different countries.

“This involves the things you should do and not do in each market to avoid situations,” he said, noting that despite the cultural similarities between Latin American countries and Puerto Rico, businessmen in these countries may feel uncomfortable with the English-infused commercial vocabulary used by Puerto Ricans.

“Mexicans are people who prefer to have more familiar conversations. They're not like Americans who go straight to doing business,” he said. “Don't be surprised if they invite you to lunch beforehand and then talk about business, getting to know you as an individual. Unlike in other countries in Europe, where we might go straight to the point, let's do business immediately.”

Burgos said the most successful export ventures secured by his agency have been to Latin American countries such as the Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Peru and Chile, as well as to countries in the Caribbean such as Trinidad and Tobago, Jamaica, Barbados and the Bahamas. In Europe, the agency has facilitated local exports of products and services to Spain and Italy. While there has been little interest in Asia and Africa, Puerto Rican companies have ventured into the Philippines India and Singapore, he said.

He said his agency has facilitated the export of goods such as automobile parts, school supplies, domestic cleaning products, handicraft and religious jewelry, software as well as agricultural products. Local companies providing professional services in engineering and pharmaceutical validation have also entered foreign markets with the agency's help. 🌍

When Exporting, Logistics is Key

Behind every successful shipment lies a complex network of logistical decisions that determines a company's competitiveness

By Pedro J. Rosaly
President & CEO
 Islandwide

Ground transportation is the starting point. Before cargo reaches the port or airport, it must travel along roads, through collection centers, and into warehouses. Every kilometer counts. Every stop matters. It is in this initial stage that the efficiency of the entire export chain is tested.

The process requires planning. Routes are mapped, times are calculated, permits are checked, and vehicle departures are coordinated. Everything must match: available inventory, required documentation, and transport conditions. A slip-up in any of these steps can mean delays, cost overruns, or even the loss of a business opportunity.

Technology has radically changed how we operate. Today, tracking systems, delivery management platforms, and route optimization algorithms allow us to anticipate problems before they occur. Information flows in real time. Knowing where the merchandise is, how long it will take to arrive, and whether the customer has received it is no longer a luxury: it's a necessity.

But technology doesn't replace human expertise. Behind every delivery are people who know the roads, customer habits, and the specific characteristics of each region. Their knowledge complements what the systems calculate. It's this combination of data and human judgment that ensures an operation runs smoothly.

The final leg—the so-called "last mile"—remains the biggest challenge. Meeting deadlines, ensuring product safety, and delivering a satisfactory experience require precision and commitment. This stage, though short, defines the customer's perception of the entire process.

Modern exporting demands more than just transportation. It requires vision, strategy, and responsiveness. When logistics are carefully managed and supported by smart tools, borders cease to be an obstacle and become an opportunity.

Because facilitating trade isn't just about moving goods. It's about moving the economy, relationships, and a country's development.

KEYS TO EFFICIENT EXPORTING

Intelligent planning:

Analyze routes, evaluate costs, and define times before moving a single vehicle.

Precise coordination:

Align inventory, transportation, and documentation on a single management platform.

Applied technology:

Use tracking and optimization systems that allow total visibility of the process.

Ongoing Training:

Logistics personnel must be proficient in both technical and operational processes.

Constant communication:

Keep customers informed about every stage of delivery. Trust travels too.

Puerto Rico: Gateway for Global Entrepreneurs

For many years, the island has combined the legal stability of the United States with its own fiscal autonomy—a blend that continues to attract investors, service exporters, and innovative entrepreneurs

By Roxana Cruz-Rivera, Esq., LL.M.
Founder & CEO

Today, Puerto Rico’s business climate is defined by its modernized tax system, competitive incentives under Act 60 of 2019, and a government committed to fostering new industries while maintaining compliance discipline.

For investors and business owners looking to expand into U.S. territory with distinctive tax advantages, understanding how to operate in Puerto Rico is essential. Doing business here requires not only sound planning but also a grasp of the island’s unique legal and fiscal landscape.

A U.S. jurisdiction with its own tax system

Puerto Rico occupies a singular position: it is part of the United States, yet for federal income tax purposes it is treated as a foreign country. Residents of Puerto Rico pay taxes on their worldwide income to the Puerto Rico Treasury Department, while nonresidents pay tax only on income from Puerto Rico sources.

OPPORTUNITY ISLAND

At the same time, under Section 933 of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code, U.S. taxpayers may exclude from their U.S. federal income tax all income derived from Puerto Rico sources and may claim federal foreign-tax credits to avoid double taxation on income from other sources.

This duality provides entrepreneurs with two key advantages: the protection and legal framework of the U.S. system, and the opportunity to benefit from Puerto Rico's own tax incentives. The Puerto Rico Incentives Code (Act 60-2019) consolidated more than 70 prior economic development statutes into a single, comprehensive law designed to simplify and stimulate investment.

Choosing the right business vehicle

Foreign investors and local entrepreneurs alike typically establish their Puerto Rico operations through Limited Liability Companies (LLCs), corporations, or partnerships. LLCs are especially popular because they provide liability protection while allowing flexibility in managing its operations and how profits are taxed.

Under the Puerto Rico Internal Revenue Code, a Puerto Rico LLC may elect to be taxed as either a corporation or a partnership. Choosing partnership or disregarded-entity treatment often avoids the double taxation that applies to corporate structures, allowing income to “pass through” directly to the owners. This election must be filed with the Treasury Department by the due date of the income-tax return.

Before commencing operations

Every new business must first register with the Puerto Rico Treasury Department (Hacienda) and obtain a Merchant Registration Certificate, even if its activities are exempt from collecting Puerto Rico sales and use tax. This certificate determines whether the business is required to charge, retain, and remit the Sales and Use Tax (SUT)—an 11.5% levy comprising a 10.5% state tax and a 1% municipal tax.

Next, all businesses must apply for the Single Permit (Permiso Único), which consolidates several required authorizations into one online application filed through the Department of Economic Development and Commerce's business portal. The Single Permit typically includes a use permit, fire prevention and environmental health certifications, and other relevant municipal or retail licenses. Finally, entrepreneurs should register for the Municipal License Tax, imposed on the gross volume of business. Rates range from 0.3% to 0.5% for most enterprises (and up to 1.5% for financial institutions). Registration must occur within 30 days of beginning operations.

Continuing compliance: Taxes and reports

Puerto Rico's tax obligations are predictable but layered. Corporations pay a graduated tax ranging from 20% to 39%, plus an alternative minimum tax if applicable. Returns are due on the 15th day of the fourth month after the fiscal year closes. Partnerships electing pass-through treatment must file informative returns by the end of the third month, and businesses must meet municipal tax return, property tax return, and annual-report obligations according to fixed deadlines.

Puerto Rico Incentives Code (Act 60-2019)

Enacted on July 1, 2019, the Puerto Rico Incentives Code—known locally as Act 60—unified decades of economic development laws. The reform modernized the framework for granting tax benefits, while ensuring fiscal responsibility and greater oversight.

Act 60 encompasses a range of sectors: export services, manufacturing, financial services, insurance, renewable energy, tourism, agriculture, and individual investors. The incentives are granted through formal decrees that lock in tax benefits for fixed terms, typically 15 years, providing investors with long-term certainty.

Export services and promoter activities

Businesses that export services from Puerto Rico may qualify for a 4% income-tax rate on eligible income and a 100% exemption on dividends distributed from that income. Eligible services include consulting, legal, tax, management, marketing, IT, software, and other professional or shared-service operations.

Individual resident investors

Qualified individuals who become bona fide residents of Puerto Rico enjoy a 100% exemption from Puerto Rico income tax on all dividends, interest, and long-term capital gains realized after relocation. To qualify, an individual must not have been a resident in the prior six years, must acquire a residence within two years, make annual charitable contributions, and file annual reports with the Treasury Department.

Other incentive areas

Manufacturing, renewable energy, tourism, and creative industries also receive preferential treatment under Act 60. Incentives include reduced tax rates, property-tax exemptions, and transferable credits for film and media production projects. Financial and insurance services under Acts 273 and 399 continue with a 4% rate, reinforcing Puerto Rico's status as a regional financial hub.

The local dimension

Beyond the headline incentives, business success in Puerto Rico depends on consistent compliance with municipal and regulatory requirements. The system, though detailed, operates transparently and is increasingly digital, facilitating proper administration through platforms like SURI (Treasury's Unified Internal Revenue System) and CRIM (Municipal Revenue Collection Center).

Other incentives

In addition to tax incentives, Puerto Rico's Department of Economic Development and Commerce (DDEC) administers a portfolio of cash grants and support programs designed to promote job creation, innovation, and capital investment. These include Labor Support and Project Importance Grants that reward companies generating employment or introducing new technologies; Infrastructure Improvement and Machinery & Equipment Grants that help modernize operations and expand productive capacity; and Marketing and Innovation incentives that fund promotional campaigns and strengthen small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) engaged in science, technology, or export activities. Energy-conscious businesses may also benefit from Green Energy Grants that encourage efficiency and sustainability within their facilities. Together, these programs complement the tax benefits of Act 60, providing direct financial support to projects that advance Puerto Rico's economic transformation.

Next steps for new investors

In general, investors should: (1) organize under a Puerto Rico or foreign entity; (2) register with the Puerto Rico Treasury Department and obtain a Merchant Certificate; (3) engage local tax professionals; (4) evaluate classification elections; (5) apply for the Single Permit and register at the municipal level; and (6) maintain accounting and filings in Puerto Rico to safeguard incentive benefits.

Opportunity anchored in compliance

Puerto Rico's competitive position lies not only in its preferential tax treatment but in its transparency and predictability. The Incentives Code rewards real economic activity, job creation, and innovation. With proper planning, compliance, and local expertise, Puerto Rico stands as a gateway for investment, innovation, and sustainable development in the Caribbean and the broader Americas. 🌐

Puerto Rico: A Global Platform for Tourism, Trade, and Economic Acceleration

Puerto Rico is at a pivotal moment in its economic trajectory

By Jorge L. Pérez
CEO

Around the world, destinations that succeed in tourism, logistics, and investment attraction share a common strength: a clear strategy supported by world-class infrastructure, disciplined execution, and a cohesive national brand. Puerto Rico now has the opportunity—and the momentum—to position itself not as a regional player but as a global platform for travel, commerce, and economic growth.

The tourism sector is at the center of this transformation. Over the past several years, Puerto Rico has shattered performance records across key metrics: air arrivals, lodging demand, visitor spending, and brand visibility. Markets in North America, Latin America, and Europe continue to expand, while high-growth segments such as luxury travel, sports tourism, entertainment, gastronomy, and the meetings, incentive travel, conventions, and exhibitions (MICE) industry are reshaping Puerto Rico's competitive position on the world stage.

This growth is not accidental. It reflects a maturing ecosystem—public and private sectors aligned on strategy, a more sophisticated data-driven approach to marketing, and an increasingly diversified inventory of visitor experiences. Puerto Rico is demonstrating that it can meet global standards in service delivery, infrastructure quality, safety, and cultural programming. More importantly, it is proving that tourism can be a foundational pillar of long-term economic competitiveness.

But the real opportunity ahead is exponential. Global destinations that achieved accelerated growth—Spain in the 1990s, Colombia in the 2010s, the Dominican Republic in the last decade—did so by scaling strategically and investing boldly. Puerto Rico can follow a similar trajectory. With the right policy alignment and strategic investments, the island can push the mindset to quadruple its annual visitor volume within the next four years, a milestone that would drive major job creation, expand tax revenue, stimulate entrepreneurship, and strengthen every node of the supply chain.

Tourism acts as both an economic catalyst and an export platform. Every visitor becomes a conduit for Puerto Rican products, culture, and intellectual capital.”

Jorge L. Pérez
CEO of Discover Puerto Rico

The intersection between tourism and logistics amplifies this potential. Puerto Rico's geographic position—connected directly to U.S. markets, embedded within the Americas, and increasingly linked to Europe—creates natural leverage for air and maritime connectivity. Growth in visitor traffic enhances demand for cargo, perishables, manufacturing inputs, and specialized services. A stronger logistics ecosystem, in turn, supports export capacity across pharmaceuticals, agriculture, technology, creative industries, and consumer goods.

In this framework, tourism acts as both an economic catalyst and an export platform. Every visitor becomes a conduit for Puerto Rican products, culture, and intellectual capital. Our culinary movement, creative industries, and hospitality standards are elevating Puerto Rico's global identity—opening doors to new markets and strengthening our competitive advantage. In a world where national brands shape investment flows, talent mobility, and geopolitical relevance, Puerto Rico's tourism success is a strategic asset.

For policymakers and business leaders, the imperative is clear: we must operate with scale, urgency, and alignment. Achieving global competitiveness will require continued investment in infrastructure, destination stewardship, workforce development, seamless mobility, and regulatory frameworks that facilitate growth. Strengthening air and maritime gateways, accelerating hotel and luxury inventory development, modernizing convention and entertainment assets, and safeguarding natural and cultural resources are essential for sustained expansion.

Equally crucial is fostering deep collaboration across the ecosystem—government agencies, municipalities, investors, developers, airlines, cruise partners, entrepreneurs, and local communities. Global destinations succeed when stakeholders steer in the same direction, guided by a shared vision and informed by rigorous data.

Puerto Rico has already demonstrated its capacity to deliver world-class results. The island’s resilience, creative energy, and service culture set it apart in an increasingly competitive global tourism marketplace. The task ahead is to think bigger: to position Puerto Rico not merely as a destination, but as a global platform for travel, trade, and economic acceleration—a country that competes and wins internationally, 365 days a year. 🌍

“ This growth is not accidental. It reflects a maturing ecosystem—public and private sectors aligned on strategy, a more sophisticated data-driven approach to marketing, and an increasingly diversified inventory of visitor experiences.”

Air Cargo Hub in Puerto Rico Rises

‘Momentum’ in supply chain industry created by federal waiver; positive impact on manufacturing

By José Alvarado Vega
BizData Book

Efforts to turn Puerto Rico into a regional air cargo transshipment hub that specializes in pharmaceutical and medical cargo seem to be starting to bear fruit.

More than five years after the U.S. Department of Transportation first granted a Puerto Rico government request to exempt the island’s international airports from certain air cabotage regulations, the federal air cargo waiver is incentivizing the modernization of the island’s supply chain, transportation and logistics industry, spurring construction of specialized infrastructure and shoring up expertise needed to handle warehousing and shipments of pharmaceutical raw materials and products.

Puerto Rico Economic Development and Commerce Secretary Sebastián Negrón Reichard said these improvements in transportation and logistics, along with Trump administration policies that aim to bring back manufacturing to the United States, are gradually making Puerto Rico more competitive again in manufacturing, as evidenced by announcements made in 2025 by pharmaceutical and medical devices companies to expand production on the island.

“The waiver was initially obtained in 2020, thanks to the efforts of then-Resident Commissioner, now Governor Jenniffer González. But not much progress had been made... until in recent years when work was begun with the air cargo community to do several things, such as air cargo handling certification, with eight companies certified last year (2024),” Negrón said in an interview with BizData Book at his Hato Rey office. “This year (2025), four more companies are in the process of becoming certified. And all of this is happening

“The waiver allows for flexibility that U.S. jurisdictions typically don’t have. That approach also allows for, and has created, a momentum for cargo and logistics in Puerto Rico.”

Sebastián Negrón Reichard
Secretary of Economic Development and Commerce

in the context of tariff changes, logistical disruptions, and reshoring, which creates a positioning window.”

The federal waiver allows foreign (non-U.S.) airlines to station aircraft in Puerto Rico and dispatch cargo from a widebody aircraft to multiple smaller aircraft, and vice versa. This enables foreign carriers to consolidate international cargo from various destinations onto a single incoming plane, then transfer it to different outgoing aircraft for further transport, enabling more efficient routing and use of aircraft. The waiver does not authorize foreign carriers to conduct cabotage, which is the domestic transport of goods or passengers. According to the waiver, transfers conducted by foreign airlines are restricted to scenarios where both the incoming and outgoing aircraft are operating to or from the carrier’s home country. These carriers can mix cargo from different flights, but cannot include domestic (U.S.) cargo. These types of waivers benefit airlines by allowing them to connect with more destinations by leveraging partner networks, even where their own network is limited.

The waiver granted to Puerto Rico, which also applies to passenger traffic, must be renewed every two years, with the next renewal deadline in January 2027. The other U.S. territories that have received waivers for air cabotage are Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

“The waiver allows for flexibility that U.S. jurisdictions typically don’t have. That approach... also allows for, and has created, a momentum for cargo and logistics in Puerto Rico,” said Negrón, who added that the government has worked with the private sector to shore up expertise in cargo management and infrastructure needed for the large volume of air traffic cargo expected.

The previous Gov. Pedro Pierluisi administration as well as the current Gov. González administration have decided to leverage Puerto Rico’s strength as a major center for pharmaceutical and medical device manufacturing in order to establish a specialized air cargo hub that allows such production to be shipped directly to the principal markets of the world, instead of having to go through secondary airports in the United States. And while large volumes of pharmaceutical products are still shipped on less costly ocean carriers, air freight carriers provide the controlled conditions for certain time- and temperature-sensitive medications, like vaccines and biologics, offering a faster and more predictable way to replenish stock in critical situations.

Putting it all together

To that end, the Puerto Rico Economic Development and Commerce Department’s (DDEC, by its Spanish initials) formed a partnership with the Puerto Rico Life Sciences Air Cargo Community (PRLSACC), a grouping of companies formed in 2022 with the aim of upgrading the island’s air cargo handling and handling facilities to world-class levels to capitalize on the federal air cargo waiver. The agency approved a funding proposal with the International Air Transport Association (IATA), in which it subsidizes 80 percent of the training and regulatory evaluation and audit costs of companies that handle pharmaceutical products on the island with the purpose of obtaining certification from the IATA’s Center for Excellence for Independent Validators in Pharmaceutical Logistics (CEIV).

Pharmaceutical raw materials and products must be transported and warehoused in temperature-controlled facilities.

I would say the waiver has impacted the quality and service that pharmaceutical companies receive in terms of air cargo transportation,...Knowing that there's world-class cargo and logistics infrastructure plays a key role.”

The companies that have been certified (as of October 2025) are PrimeAir, Corp.; Expeditors, Int.; Cesar Castillo, LLC.; Isla Frio Refrigeration, Inc.; Ground Motive Dependable Airline Services (GDM); E.T.H. Cargo Services, Inc.; American Airlines (AA); and FedEx. Companies that are in the process of certification (as of October 2025) include Droguería Betances, Magic Transport, OM Transport, and The Air Group.

The nonprofit INDUNIV (Industry University Research Center, Inc.) -- which seeks collaboration between the biopharma industry, academia and the government -- as well as the Luis Muñoz Marín International Airport (LMMIA), managed by Aerostar Airport Holdings, have assisted DDEC in “executing the certification process with the companies,” the DDEC chief said. In 2024, Aerostar -- member of PRLSACC -- announced it was investing $4.6 million in a new state-of-the-art road system connecting cargo facilities across LMMIA, which currently handles over 90 percent of airfreight for the island.

Negrón stressed, moreover, that his agency signed an agreement with Polytechnic University of Puerto Rico in August 2025 to develop an interactive map with the main assets of the island’s logistics and cargo ecosystem, which will include real-time information on logistics infrastructure, routes, operators, certifications, capabilities, and system performance.

Meanwhile, the Mayagüez campus of the University of Puerto Rico inaugurated in 2025 the first Center of Excellence for Transportation and Logistics (CETL) in Puerto Rico and the Caribbean, which aims to attract and develop talent for the transportation and logistics industry. The center received an initial $1 million grant from Seattle-based transportation and logistics company Saltchuk, which pledged to contribute $10 million over 10 years to support the center’s growth.

Negrón, who noted that a report on the economic and job impact of the waiver is due out later in 2025, said the expanding air cargo infrastructure as well as other factors are helping to attract manufacturing investments. He said the government in 2025 received commitments from pharmaceutical and medical device companies to create 3,000 new jobs and invest $1 billion in Puerto Rico. Pharmaceutical and medical device multinationals such as Stryker Puerto Rico, LLC in Humacao; AbbVie; Viant Puerto Rico, Inc.; and Amgen announced expansion of local operations during the year.

“The [Trump] tariff policies, the speed with which the government is moving, the fact that we have an executive concierge to handle all expansions and help with all the intergovernmental bureaucratic procedures, are what have encouraged pharmaceutical and medical device companies to decide to expand in Puerto Rico,” the DDEC chief said.

“I would say the waiver has impacted the quality and service that pharmaceutical companies receive in terms of air cargo transportation,” he said, noting that airlines such as Iberia and United have added flights to Puerto Rico with larger airplanes with more cargo space. “Knowing that there’s world-class cargo and logistics infrastructure plays a key role. So, it’s like both... The existence of that infrastructure impacts the pharmaceutical industry, and the fact that the pharmaceutical industry wants to grow in Puerto Rico impacts the investments companies are making in that cargo and logistics infrastructure.”

‘Operational limitations’

However, Negrón acknowledged that “operational limitations” still hamper a fully functioning regional air cargo transshipment hub in Puerto Rico. These include the lack of 24-hour airport customs services and inadequate infrastructure for handling increased aircraft operations and maintenance resulting from expanded air cargo.

The island also lacks the customized warehouse space to handle the increased air cargo traffic that a transshipment hub would bring, he said.

“Although there are CF Pharma-certified warehouses and temperature-controlled capacity, this needs to be expanded to have time-definite handling processes,” he said, referring to the shipping service that guarantees delivery by a specific date or time.

Zone 61 in Guaynabo, is an area that has space, a greenfield, to perhaps build [on it]. So, we’re ready to put out an RFP [request for proposal] to create a master plan for that area...”

Sebastián Negrón Reichard
Secretary of Economic Development and Commerce

Negrón -- a Harvard law and business graduate who served as economic advisor to Boston Mayor Michelle Wu before he was named DDEC chief by Gov. González – said that spaces at LMMIA as well as DDEC-owned property at the Free Trade Zone (FTZ) No. 61 in Guaynabo are being considered for building of such specialized warehousing.

“In fact, the FTZ is going to play a key role... the free trade zones we have, both in the department and in PRIDCO [Puerto Rico Industrial Development Co.], offer an opportunity for Puerto Rico to import products and devices without having to pay tariffs, to improve them and send them abroad, which creates jobs,” the official said. “But that free trade zone, in Zone 61 in Guaynabo, is an area that has space, a greenfield, to perhaps build [on it]. So, we’re ready to put out an RFP [request for proposal] to create a master plan for that area and see how we use it.”

Negrón said the government is considering some 30 PRIDCO facilities that will be demolished due to their deteriorated state and environmental concerns, as possible sites for future construction of air cargo facilities. Some are located in FTZs, he said. 🌐

PRCC Keeps Island Issues Alive in U.S. Capital

FACES committee expands advocacy efforts as it targets issues vital to PR economic and business prospects

By José Alvarado Vega
BizData Book

With Puerto Rico issues facing a difficult and complicated situation in Washington, the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce (PRCC) has deployed a permanent and strengthened advocacy arm that is gearing up for important battles in the U.S. capital in 2026 that will be consequential for the island's economic success.

The PRCC's Federal Affairs Chamber Educational Series, or FACES, formed six years ago as a special committee to coordinate more effective advocacy for the island's private sector before the U.S. federal government, has forged alliances with the Puerto Rico government as well as with other local industry and trade groups and third sector organizations that have led to approval of key federal legislation and regulation changes that have helped keep Puerto Rico's economy afloat as the government emerges from bankruptcy.

The work of the now permanent FACES committee has grown in importance with the sweeping economic and fiscal policies implemented by the Trump administration in 2025, including the expansion of corporate tax cuts, reduction in social spending and large-scale protectionist tariffs.

The FACES committee was established in response to concerns over the slow and uneven disbursement and use of tens of billions of dollars in federal disaster funds allocated to Puerto Rico after it was struck by hurricanes Irma and Maria in 2017, especially for rebuilding the island's hurricane-battered electrical grid.

"All of Puerto Rico's economic forecasts rely on these federal funds as the only way to achieve any kind of positive GDP [gross domestic product] growth. We realized it was important for the private sector to have a voice in both the allocation, use and oversight of these funds," attorney José Julio Aparicio Laspina, president-elect of the PRCC and one of the founders of FACES, told BizData Book.

He said the Chamber of Commerce, through FACES, has had a significant impact on Puerto Rico lobbying efforts in the nation's capital, noting that the committee's "greatest achievement" so far is the U.S. Congress's extension in 2022 of increased post-Hurricane Maria Medicaid funding until 2027, thus avoiding a funding cliff that would have threatened coverage of 64% of the population covered by the local government's Plan Vital program, which covers the medically indigent through private medical plans contracted by the government. The loss of this funding would not only have been "disastrous" for beneficiaries but also for Puerto Rico's economy as a whole, he said.

"We worked with other groups like MMAPA [Medicaid and Medicare Advantage Products Association], the Medical Association and the Pierluisi administration, particularly the PRFAA [Puerto Rico Federal Affairs Administration] office in Washington and then Resident

PRCC President-Elect

Commissioner Jennifer González-Colón, who were instrumental in avoiding that Medicaid cliff,” said Aparicio, who noted that “if you’re not healthy, you can’t go out to work or spend.”

Aparicio added that the FACES committee also worked with Home Builders Association President Agustín Rojo in successfully persuading the Biden administration to raise the eligibility threshold for affordable housing at the federal level, allowing more Puerto Rico residents to qualify and not be penalized for having a job or having a moderate income.

Ramping up outreach

In 2025, the FACES committee expanded its advocacy efforts by holding the first-ever “Puerto Rico Open for Business” reception in Washington, D.C. in May, an event that brought together influential U.S. Congress members, including those on committees relevant to Puerto Rico, along with Puerto Rican business leaders and public officials. At the same time, the Chamber also participated in the SelectUSA Investment Summit 2025 in Maryland, a key event for promoting foreign investment in the United States. The group met with company executives, investors and economic development organizations to promote Puerto Rico as a manufacturing destination with a specialized and highly skilled workforce.

Luis E. Pizarro-Otero, Esq. former PRCC president, told BizData Book that the event, which will be held annually, included Puerto Rican business owners who discussed issues of vital interest to the island with members of Congress and congressional staffers, who, he noted, are “even more important than members of Congress because they are the ones who move things.” The dialogue revolved around issues such as the slow pace of funding and projects to rebuild the electrical grid, insertion of the island in the administration’s reshoring initiatives, and unequal funding for housing, health and food programs.

“We managed to put a face on the people of Puerto Rico; it’s not just the government who’s there asking for stuff. It’s important when dealing with a Republican administration, that we have a solid private sector. It’s important to send the message that we are not going there to beg for money, but that we want to do business,” Pizarro said, adding that as a result of meetings with White House officials, Puerto Rico-based businesses were given more opportunities to participate in U.S. Army bidding for construction projects on the island worth more than $500 million.

Former Illinois Congressman Jerry Weller, who works as PRCC lobbyist in Washington, told BizData Book that meetings and events organized by the FACES program have “developed relationships [in Washington] and reinforced the fact that Puerto Rico has a strong, viable business sector.”

“This is a constant, ongoing effort for advocacy and education and achieving our goals. They’re not going to happen overnight. We have to make friends,” he said. “We have to enlist policymakers in the Congress and the administration who will be our advocates. And that’s a constant process. One thing I learned when I was a member of Congress is that you have hundreds of people tugging on your arms every week asking for help. So, you have to be a constant presence to stay on the radar screen of any member of Congress.”

Issues to be targeted in 2026

In 2026, the PRCC, through its FACES committee, will focus on a set of issues considered of urgent importance to Puerto Rico, including speeding up funding for reconstruction of Puerto Rico’s energy grid, inserting the island in manufacturing reshoring and nearshoring efforts, and ensuring adequate federal health and food aid to the island. The committee plans to increase advocacy efforts to give issues vital to the island a fighting chance in Washington, where they have been drowned out by the current partisan squabbling between Congress and the White House, including the record-breaking government shutdown of 2025.

1 Speeding up disaster reconstruction funding, including federal approval of projects for a resilient electricity grid

Pizarro stressed that a chief priority for the FACES committee is working with the White House to solve bureaucratic issues delaying the disbursement of Hurricane Maria disaster reconstruction monies to Puerto Rico. The PRCC board of directors approved a resolution requesting that President Trump appoint a task force modeled on the one created by President Obama for Hurricane Sandy. He said committee members met with White House officials over the matter, adding that they found the idea “interesting, but have not given us a formal answer.”

“We are also pushing for a local task force while we wait for the federal task force. We need a forum to give visibility to the cause of the problems, to see the status of the projects and where they are late and who is in charge,” he said, that there has been some progress in discussions between the Puerto Rico Federal Affairs Administration (PRAFA) office in Washington and the Department of Energy and the Environmental Protection Agency’s technical teams regarding proposals to ease regulations that are seen as hampering the approval of electricity grid projects.

Weller said the Hurricane Sandy Rebuilding Task Force, led by then secretary of Housing and Urban Development Shaun Donovan, expedited reconstruction projects in hurricane battered New York and New Jersey within a few years.

“We have urged the Trump White House to create a similar task force. You know, the benefit of that is it has the power to knock some heads,” he said. “The unfortunate thing over the last seven years is we’ve seen too many people, primarily at the local level, just blaming the other guy for the reason that the work hasn’t gotten done. We have almost $80 billion in federal funds that are currently sitting there waiting to be used.”

Weller, who advocated for Puerto Rico issues while he served in the U.S. Congress between 1995 and 2009, added that the Trump administration has started to take back Federal Emergency Management Agency funding for reconstruction projects because of failure to meet deadlines. He said much of these monies were allocated under the president’s first term ending in 2021.

“We can make great progress on the energy grid, because reliable and affordable power, electrical power is absolutely critical for economic growth. The money is there, so it’s [a matter of] using the money and cutting through the blame game that’s prevented the work from getting done over the past seven years,” he said, adding that the proposed task force as well as congressional oversight “can really make a difference” in speeding up reconstruction projects.

The former Republican congressman said that while there was an initial waiver from the U.S. Department of Energy to help expedite electricity grid projects, more waivers are needed.

“Unfortunately, NEPA, the National Environmental Law [National Environmental Policy Act], requires endless studies be done, which sometimes can take years; we need waivers from that in order to get the power lines and the grid restored and put back up,” he said.

2 Congressional approval of federal manufacturing incentives and inclusion of Puerto Rico in President Trump’s reshoring and nearshoring efforts

In 2025, the PRCC gave its backing to the bipartisan Medical Manufacturing Economic Development and Sustainability Act, or MMEDS Act, a federal proposal aimed at reviving the pharmaceutical manufacturing sector on the island.

It’s important to send the message that we are not going there to beg for money, but that we want to do business...”

Luis E. Pizarro Otero, Esq.
Former PRCC president

Introduced by Congresswoman Nicole Malliotakis, R-N.Y., with support from Reps. Ritchie Torres, D-N.Y., Jeff Hurd, R-Colo., and Darren Soto, D-Fla., the bill encourages the return of pharmaceutical production to the United States, with a focus on distressed areas like Puerto Rico. The legislation proposes dollar-for-dollar tax credits and other incentives to support infrastructure, workforce training and local procurement of essential medical products. Similar legislation had been presented in the previous Congress.

“The president had said he would bring home the manufacturing of products, food and materials, and Made in America includes what is made in Puerto Rico. We want to compete with the rest of the states and be attractive due to our geopolitical position and because Puerto Rico has 80 pharmaceutical and medical device manufacturers that have remained even after the end of Section 936 corporate tax breaks,” Pizarro told BizData Book, adding that getting this type of legislation passed involves “playing chess,” so that “when the ideal moment arrives then we can get our language [in Malliotakis’s bill] as a rider in other bills that get approved.”

For his part, Weller acknowledged that getting Congress to approve special tax investments to invest in Puerto Rico has been difficult, and suggested the island be incorporated into “broader reshoring policies that benefit all the U.S., including Puerto Rico,” adding that “right now, the Trump tariffs on pharmaceuticals are frankly very helpful to moving production to Puerto Rico and expanding existing capacity.”

“The local government and the local private sector, I believe, should focus on how we can sell Puerto Rico as the best place to move U.S. manufacturing that’s being brought back from Asia and elsewhere,” he said.

3 Ensuring adequate funding for Medicare and Medicaid programs in Puerto Rico, including avoiding the Medicaid cliff in 2027

One issue that Weller stressed as a chief priority for Puerto Rico is the extension of the post-disaster increase in Medicaid funding to the island beyond 2027. The so-called Medicaid cliff, which would arrive on Sept. 30, 2027, would end the increase of $19.4 billion for the island's Medicaid program over the five-year period since 2022, when Congress approved the current extension.

Puerto Rico's Medicaid funding formula is a capped block grant, not a state-style open-ended match. Since 2022, the Federal Medical Assistance Percentage (FMAP) has been set at 76%, meaning the federal government will cover 76% of costs until the annual funding cap is reached. After the cap is hit, the federal government will no longer match spending, forcing Puerto Rico to fund the remainder itself. If Congress does not approve a further extension, the FMAP will fall back to 55 percent, which will reduce federal support to the island's Plan Vital program for the medically indigent.

Weller stressed that while it would be ideal to make the block grant increase permanent, or include the island in the same Medicaid formula the states have, Congress "is always looking at what something costs, regardless of the merits of the policy."

"You know, that costs money, and it has to be offset," said the former congressman, who was instrumental in securing billions of dollars in Medicaid funding for Puerto Rico hospitals. "But that is very, very difficult just because the overall cost of that to the U.S. Treasury would be high and would slip out, and we'd have to counter that."

Pizarro said Gov. Gonzalez-Colón' invited him to form part of the health taskforce to represent the private sector in efforts to lobby for the Medicaid funding extension in Congress.

"We achieved this funding [in 2022] because we worked as a team. These are difficult issues. It's a question of timing. In 2026, we have to return to knock on doors in Congress to be able to achieve that impact. That is part of the knowhow of FACES. I have been going to Washington to lobby for health issues since 2009," said the past PRCC president, who is president and CEO of FIDE LLC, which specializes in public policy issues involving health organizations.

Meanwhile, Pizarro said the committee continues mobilizing support to persuade the Trump administration to increase funding for the Medicare Advantage (MA) program covering most of the island's older adults. MA payments on the island are 39% below the U.S. average, 37% below the lowest state, and even 21% below that of the U.S. Virgin Islands.

"We are working the Medicare part as an administrative issue because there are regulations that are issued annually," he said. "The fee regulations for Medicare Advantage, for example, are going to be issued in April 2026. This involves an intense lobbying effort that involves the governor, who sent a letter to the Department of Health and Human Services secretary about the matter. We are waiting for this before pivoting to Congress."

Unfortunately, we were not included when Congress passed its SNAP legislation this past year (2025).

4 Congressional approval of legislation to convert Puerto Rico's NAP program into SNAP

The FACES committee is also coordinating efforts to lobby Congress to include Puerto Rico in the entitlement-based Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), which provides food assistance to low-income households, which operates throughout all 50 U.S. states, the District of Columbia, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands. The island currently relies on its separately operated Nutrition Assistance Program (NAP), which has received a capped federal block grant since the 1980s and has 1.4 million beneficiaries. Pizarro said Puerto Rico is receiving 25 percent less in nutritional funding as a result of being in the NAP program. Legislation has been filed in Congress for a 10-year transition from NAP to SNAP.

"In October, a bipartisan bill was filed in the U.S. House and Senate as part of the Farm Bill of 2023. The government of Puerto Rico established an alliance with the private sector, headed by the Coalition for Food Security, of which the Chamber of Commerce is a part, to obtain equal funding in SNAP," he said, acknowledging that this is a long-term effort that may depend on the results of the 2026 midterm elections.

The Senate version of the proposed 2024 Farm Bill included a NAP to SNAP transition, but the House version did not, necessitating a compromise in a conference committee.

"Unfortunately, we were not included when Congress passed its SNAP legislation this past year (2025). So, when the program's up for reauthorization again in another four years, we can include Puerto Rico in that transition," Weller said. 🙏

Giving the Stamp of Approval to PR Exports

PRCC issues certifications to verify origin of locally made products for international trade purposes

By José Alvarado Vega
BizData Book

The Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce (PRCC) is the main entity on the island authorized to issue certificates of origin (CO) for products made locally and exported to other countries besides the United States.

A CO is a document used in international trade to identify a product's country of origin, as well as the value of the product and the identities of the exporter and importer. COs are used for customs purposes, especially when a tariff or other import duty is required.

As a natural and trusted entity in issuing COs, the PRCC voluntarily adheres to guidelines for issuing certificates of origin set by the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) to ensure consistency and credibility.

COs may be required by the importing country in any of the following cases:

- ▶ When a shipment of drugs or narcotics is involved.
- ▶ To ensure that the goods are not prohibited or restricted by the exporting country.
- ▶ When trade agreements exist between the importing and exporting countries.
- ▶ When preferential tariffs apply to certain specific products.
- ▶ When the importer so requests.
- ▶ When import quotas have been established.

Ana M. Nieves Reyes, marketing and sales assistant at the PRCC and contact person for issuing COs, told BizData Book that during the fiscal year that ended on June 30, 2025, the Chamber issued a total of 526 certificates of origin. She noted that not all countries require certificates of origin from exporters.

“And it really is for the country that requests the certificate of origin. And it’s not for all products either,” she said. “In other words, not all countries necessarily require it, and not all products necessarily need a certificate of origin, because many other things are exported from here.”

Some countries require specific certificates of origin, which have a different format and specific requirements, said Nieves, noting that such is the case for Israel and for Mexico and Central American countries, which have trading agreements with the United States.

For purposes of the locally issued CO, Puerto Rico is considered the place of origin, but not the country; in those cases, the country is the United States, Nieves said. There may be specific cases in which the product is not entirely manufactured in the territory, but if most of it is, then in these cases, a CO is also issued, she said.

There are two main types of COs: preferential (allowing exported goods to benefit from customs duties) and non-preferential (the most common type; it certifies the country of origin of the goods but does not grant tariff advantages).

To qualify for a CO, a product must be wholly produced, mined or harvested in Puerto Rico. Goods whose production involves more than one country can be deemed to originate on the island if its manufacture involved a “last substantial transformation” resulting in a new product or representing an important stage of manufacture, according to ICC guidelines.

Nieves said exported products do not always need to be completely made in Puerto Rico to be issued a certificate of origin, adding that this is often the case for pharmaceutical products.

“There are things that are finished here, medications that are finished here or manufactured here, but they aren’t packaged in Puerto Rico,” she said. “Now, the product does have to be made in Puerto Rico, or at least part of it.”

Each country has different rules for the products crossing its borders, as well as for each of its trading partners. For example, products manufactured in Mexico have a lower tariff at the U.S. border than products from China. Customs officials use the certificate of origin to calculate any fees or restrictions on a shipment.

Nieves said that shortly after President Trump imposed steep tariffs on nations in 2025, the government of these nations started to request that local exporters alter their COs so that they only include Puerto Rico as the origin of exported products and exclude the United States so they could be exempted from these nations increased tariffs, which she said is not allowed.

“We had some specific situations with certain companies where we had to explain that we cannot alter the certificates of origin. We can’t remove the fact that we are a U.S. territory, because that’s already included in the certificate itself. That’s one of the parts you can’t change,” she said.

Documentation is key

Nieves said that exporters usually call in to ask about required documentation. “They must bring a processing sheet to the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce with the basic information of the companies, and the certificate of origin filled out completely. We don’t fill out the document for you,” she said. “The document must be completed, along with the commercial invoice. For each commercial invoice, there must be an individual certificate of origin.”

Nieves said all the required documents are on the Chamber’s website, camarapr.org, under the “Benefits” section.

“There you’ll find all the literature, documents, examples, and certificates you can use. We have them in PDF and Word formats to make it easier for the client,” she said. “The client brings the documentation [to the PRCC’s offices in Miramar]. We verify the certificate, that their invoice number matches the invoice number they’re bringing, that the amounts are the same, and then we proceed to add our logo [stamp].”

CHAMBER IN ACTION

Nieves added: "If they leave part of the certificate of origin blank, we obviously always contact the company so they can make the necessary adjustments and send it in full. Otherwise, we don't certify it until it includes their signature, addresses, invoice number, and invoice date. In other words, there are details we can't touch. We simply tell the company, 'Look, you're missing this,' and they or the courier waits for them to resend it. They can do this by email."

The costs of COs will vary depending on the total commercial invoice, and payments can be made by credit card, check, ACH transfer, or cash. Nieves said PRCC members receive as a benefit a special rate on CO fees versus non-members, adding that Juanita Otero Santana, Member Services Officer at PRCC, is in charge of processing such payments. She noted that the CO applications can be processed in several ways, but the exporters to countries requiring paper documentation must receive the original CO with an embossed stamp, which is the valid document.

"We have several ways to issue certificates. The person can come in person... The process involves bringing all the documentation. We always ask them to bring a copy of the documents to keep here, and then we collect the fee, certify the certificate, and add an embossed stamp," she said. "Alternatively, some send them to me by email, I send them back by email, and then they send a courier to pick up the original because they always need the original."

The documents required to issue a CO are a processing sheet, a completed CO (without alterations), a commercial invoice, and any other documents the client may need to attach (e.g., a packing list). "So, on that platform, the person fills out a registration form. Once the registration is complete, the information is entered into the platform," she explained. "All of that is sent to Juanita Otero. She, of course, sends them everything they need to fill out. And once they're on the platform, they call me, I receive the notification, I prepare the certificate for them, and they can print it through the platform.

"The process is quite fast, and we've already had several companies using it because it's more convenient for them. They don't have to send anything... Obviously, they don't have to look for original documents or send a courier; they do everything directly through the platform," she continued explaining.

Exporters must ensure that their COs are accurate and follow the relevant international rules and guidelines. Failing to do so can lead to delays in shipping, additional fees, or the goods being turned away altogether.

Sometimes, the destination customs authority may request proof of review from a specific chamber of commerce. The PRCC, like other chambers of commerce, usually only certifies verifiable information. However, if presented with a declaration attesting to commercial details that can't be checked, the chamber will digitally stamp the document and attest to the position and identity of the signatory.

The Chamber reserves the right to require the preparation of a sworn statement to support the information to be certified, and can also require additional information to corroborate whether the product to be exported meets guidelines.

In addition, the buyer may require a CO in a letter of credit as part of the documentary requirements. The letter of credit may specify additional certifications or language that must be included in the CO for it to follow requirements.

PR Forum Launched to Settle Business Disputes Outside Courtroom

PRCC's Center for Alternative Dispute Resolution seeks to address 'judicial backlog' by providing mediation and arbitration services to settle commercial conflicts

By José Alvarado Vega
BizData Book

Business owners in Puerto Rico have a new forum to settle their disputes outside the island's congested court system.

The Center for Alternative Dispute Resolution (Centro para la Resolución Alternativa de Controversias) has been reestablished by the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce (PRCC) to quickly and effectively handle commercial disputes which could otherwise get lost in the legal maze of the court system due to the lack of expertise demanded by such specialized cases.

The Center, which is the first of its kind outside the Puerto Rico Judicial Branch's alternative dispute resolution procedures, will consider business-related cases for either mediation services or for submission to an Arbitration Court set up by the entity.

In October 2025, the PRCC's board of directors approved the by-laws and regulations to create the legal framework necessary for the Center's operation.

Efforts to launch the Center -- designed to operate independently from the PRCC -- received a boost from a new local commercial arbitration law enacted in 2024.

"On the threshold of a new chapter in its history, the [PRCC] [...] reactivates its Center for Alternative Dispute Resolution with a firm commitment to strengthening its role as a guarantor of commercial justice and the effective resolution of disputes," reads the preamble of the Center's by-laws and regulations.

"For over a century, this institution has been a pillar of business and investment, promoting trust and compliance with agreements in a constantly evolving economic environment. Today, faced with the challenges confronting local, national, and international trade, and the growing demands for legal certainty, predictability, and efficiency, it is necessary to modernize and revitalize its dispute resolution mechanisms," adds the document, which states that its services will be available to members and nonmembers alike, including affiliated associations, private entities “that promote the common interests of their members,” as well as “other businesses, companies, industries, professions; and business persons, whether public or private.”

The document states that the Center seeks to address the “judicial backlog” of business-related disputes with a “new legal framework [that] respects the autonomy of the parties, facilitates expedited processes, and promotes uniformity with international standards, while preserving Puerto Rico’s legal identity and tradition.”

The Center, which will have a team of arbitrators and mediators specialized in commercial and trade matters, is expected to be fully operational by early 2026, according to attorney Luis Enrique Romero Nieves, who is a member of the working group of advisers that drafted the entity’s regulations and contracts that parties must abide by and sign with the center to receive arbitration and mediation services.

“The Center represents a significant step forward for commercial arbitration and mediation procedures on the island,” he said in an interview with BizData Book.

The parties in a commercial dispute could agree to bring their case directly to the Center or judges could refer litigated commercial cases to the entity after the parties agree to the move. The Center, which has the discretion to choose which cases it will accept, does not address matters involving criminal law or family and probation law, unless there are elements of a commercial nature involved in these cases, Romero said.

The Center could also review commercial disputes in which the parties inked a contract that specifically instructs such cases must be settled through mediation or arbitration. Moreover, commercial disputes involving parties with overseas business locations or that involve transactions carried out in different jurisdictions may also be considered by the Center.

The attorney explained that the Center’s operations will be funded by administrative fees charged to the parties for the mediation and arbitration services, noting that PRCC members will receive a special rate on those fees. The administrative fees, which do not include mediator and arbitrator honoraria, will be based on the amount of “the claim, counterclaim, or additional claim,” according to the entity’s regulations.

Searching for alternatives to litigation

Romero, an adjunct professor of law at the Inter-American University of Puerto Rico who specializes in commercial law, stressed that a greater number of commercial disputes in international jurisdictions are being settled through arbitration and mediation procedures, as companies seek quicker, cheaper and confidential alternatives to settle disputes that could, otherwise, become stuck in court proceedings for years. Commercial disputes involve matters such as contract breaches, property disagreements, or intellectual property disputes.

Nonetheless, mediation and arbitration procedures have yet to be widely used in the settlement of business-related disputes in Puerto Rico, according to the attorney, who added that commercial disputes settled through the Puerto Rico Judicial Branch’s alternative dispute resolution procedure are relatively small in scale.

Requested data on the number of cases brought to and settled through the Judicial Branch’s alternative dispute resolution procedures had not been provided to BizData Book as of press time.

“My experience has been that ordinarily, matters referred to alternative methods in the existing state provided forum—or that parties agree to refer to alternative methods in said forum—do not involve more complex disputes or substantial claims in monetary terms,” the attorney said. “And that is precisely why the Chamber of Commerce believes that there is a space for opportunity.”

Arbitration is a commonly recognized process to settle workplace conflicts between labor and management in Puerto Rico, where it is mandated by law and has led to “significant labor peace,” noted Romero, who added that, in contrast, arbitration in the context of commercial relations, “is still in its infancy.”

“We understand that in Puerto Rico there has not been a forum that has generated in the business sector the certainty that the wide range of disputes that could arise within the legal traffic of the exchange of goods and services will be addressed with diligence, agility, and expert knowledge,” he said, adding that the challenge now will be “convincing the business sector of the competencies and qualities of the Center.”

Better prospects

The prospects for mediation and arbitration as viable alternatives to settle business disputes on the island received a boost last year with the enactment of the Puerto Rico Arbitration Act (Act 147-2024), which addresses criticisms related to delays and confusion in arbitration by clarifying the role of the courts and the applicability of federal law.

The law, which took effect on February 5, 2025, codifies rules on judicial recognition and enforcement of arbitration agreements and awards, and brings the process in line with recent developments in international commercial arbitration processes.

“This legislation repeals previous commercial arbitration laws in Puerto Rico, and provides a more thorough, detailed and sophisticated approach to the subject of arbitration,” Romero said, adding that the new law has aided in establishing the Center’s regulations by clarifying grey areas regarding the arbitration process, including the selection and rejection of arbitrators.

“A great advantage of this center, and similar ones that exist elsewhere, is that it can recruit people based on their expertise, not based on executive appointment and legislative confirmation for a judicial position,” he said.

The Center will create an available pool of duly certified and qualified mediators and arbitrators who, while not necessarily be required to be practicing attorneys, must have experience and expertise in different fields of commerce and business. The entity will work with the parties in a dispute to choose the ideal mediators or arbitrators for the case.

“Ideally, the center should have experts in tax contracts, trademark and copyright contracts, and contract-related issues in the performing arts—music, music production, event production, and more,” he said, adding that the PRCC is in conversations with island universities to reach a “collaborative agreement” on a permanent space in which the center could carry out its business, including holding arbitration hearings. “A healthy pool of available resources should be no less than 50 combined between potential arbitrators and mediators,” he said.

Moreover, the Center’s regulations state that mediation and arbitration proceedings “will be a private, voluntary, and confidential” and that the parties “agree that the arbitration proceedings process will be inadmissible as evidence in any other judicial, administrative, or private forum, except as permitted by Law 147-2024 or any substitute legislation.”

To ensure the entity’s autonomy and impartiality, the Center’s regulations specifically forbid PRCC leadership, members, and staff from intervening in mediation and arbitration processes to influence their outcome, and states that such matters could be referred to the board of directors for “evaluation and ethical and disciplinary considerations.”

Mediation vs. arbitration

While both mediation and arbitration are alternative dispute resolution procedures that are carried out outside the court system, they involve different levels of third-party authority, formality, and party control over the outcome. In the mediation process, a neutral person, or mediator, directs conversations that produce voluntary consensus between parties that lead to a mutually acceptable agreement. The mediator facilitates discussion but cannot impose a decision.

In contrast, arbitration involves a more formal and adversarial process resembling a court proceeding with a procedural framework for presenting evidence and arguments. The Center’s regulations state that this process may rely on Puerto Rico’s legal system to compel expert and witness testimony. An arbitrator acts as a private adjudicator, hears evidence, and makes a final and legally binding decision, or award, to resolve the dispute.

Awards can be final, concluding the entire arbitration process; partial, resolving some but not all issues; or interim, addressing preliminary or provisional matters with temporary effect. The Center’s regulations state that a party may submit an application to the Arbitration Court for the annulment of an arbitral award only on the grounds that the award “was obtained through corruption, fraud, or other improper conduct by one of the parties.” The parties have “an inalienable” right to involve their attorneys in the process. Both signed mediation agreements and arbitral awards are legally enforceable in Puerto Rico and internationally. International arbitral awards are widely enforceable across the globe, thanks to multilateral treaties such as the New York Convention, which streamlines the process of recognition and enforcement in 172 countries, while the Singapore Convention provides a uniform framework for recognizing and enforcing international commercial mediation outcomes across member states.

While the parties may determine the procedure they believe could lead to the best outcome, the Center will encourage exhausting the mediation process first before taking the matter to the entity’s Arbitration Court if no agreement is reached.

Romero stressed that mediation and arbitration procedures are generally more successful in managing conflicts because they can be tailored to specific disputes and parties. Arbitration, for example, is not subject to judicial rules that, “when misused in litigation proceedings, often lead to unsustainable delays,” he said.

“Participants can choose who will adjudicate, and they can discriminate based on the capabilities of whoever takes on the case. The fact that the arbitrator is a professional who does not respond to cases by random selection and the imposition of a secretariat or administrative rule makes the process more agile,” the attorney said. “Another fundamental element that, in my opinion, contributes to the desirability of alternative methods is the fact that the parties involved in the process have direct conversations with the arbitrator to establish work schedules and empower them in the terms of handling the matter.” 🌐

Prevention: Smart Investment for a Resilient Economy

PRCC and Merck join forces to promote healthier workplaces and a culture of prevention that strengthens communities across Puerto Rico

By Yanira Hernández Cabiya
BizData Book

In Puerto Rico, health projections for 2030 pose a significant challenge: chronic diseases—cardiovascular, cancer, diabetes, obesity, and cerebrovascular conditions—will continue to dominate the healthcare landscape. This scenario is exacerbated by the projected shortage of specialist physicians and the limited availability of preventive services. However, amid this situation, initiatives are emerging that aim to change the circumstances in the places where people spend a large part of their lives - the workplace.

The Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce (PRCC) and Merck have joined forces to promote the Empresas Saludables (Healthy Companies) initiative, a program dedicated to creating healthier workplaces committed to prevention, well-being, and the overall health of its employees. More than a human resources policy, it's a shared vision of social responsibility and sustainable development. "When companies invest in the health of their people, they are investing in the future of the country," says Guillermo Browne, head of the Human Health division of Merck Puerto Rico.

A study published in Cancer Epidemiology, Biomarkers & Prevention, a journal of the American Association for Cancer Research, says the economic burden of cancer is projected to reach $246 billion by 2030, while timely preventive actions could save up to $26 billion.

The vision is to collaborate to build a Puerto Rico where worker well-being is an essential part of economic growth.”

Guillermo Browne
Head of the Human Health division of
Merck Puerto Rico

From theory to action

Browne presents, as a case study, the experience of Merck. Although a culture of employee well-being seems logical in the pharmaceutical industry, it's not necessarily the norm for all pharmaceutical companies throughout the world. At Merck, however, there's a commitment to improving the quality of life of its employees, recognizing their value to the company. Therefore, the company has implemented a culture of well-being that transcends the symbolic, with health fairs, vaccination campaigns, educational talks on nutrition and early disease detection, and even a "wellness room" where employees can relax, meditate, or receive a massage before returning to work.

"We want people to work with energy, with good vibes. When employees feel good, they perform better and are more engaged," says Browne. This connection between health, motivation and productivity is precisely at the heart of the Empresas Saludables program.

The Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce has played a key role in turning this vision into a collective platform. Through Resolution No. 3, the PRCC encourages companies to coordinate vaccination clinics, promote preventive education, and facilitate access to health resources in the workplace. The goal is simple and powerful: to create a network of companies that view the health of their employees as an investment, not an expense.

A model of human sustainability

The impact of this partnership goes beyond the company walls. When an employee adopts healthy habits, that change extends to their family and the surrounding environment. It has a multiplier effect that strengthens community resilience and contributes to the country's sustainable development.

"We extend many of our initiatives to the family group, because we understand that well-being doesn't end when we leave the office. When families are well, society is well, too," Browne said.

The Empresas Saludables program seeks precisely that: to instill a culture of prevention within the business community. A company that cares for the health of its people not only increases productivity but also becomes an active agent of social change.

For the Merck executive, prevention not only improves employees' quality of life but also significantly reduces the economic costs associated with chronic diseases. "The impact of cancer in the United States alone is estimated at more than $246 billion by 2030. Preventive strategies can save up to $26 billion if implemented early," he notes.

Towards a new business culture

Merck's commitment to the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce is also an invitation. "We want to encourage other companies to take that further step, to invest in prevention and education. It's not about numbers, it's about people," Browne stresses.

The vision is to collaborate to build a Puerto Rico where worker well-being is an essential part of economic growth. Because, in the end, true competitiveness is not measured solely in numbers, but in the health and happiness of those who make businesses possible.

As Browne expresses, with the serenity of someone speaking from experience: "I would never hesitate to invest in the health of my people. It's the best investment a company can make, and the most humane." 🌱

Economic Growth and Social Impact: Two Sides of the Same Coin

Partnerships that align business goals with social impact are becoming essential drivers of sustainable development

Undoubtedly, Puerto Rico and the world are experiencing an increasingly volatile economic and social context. Changes in public policy and the transformation of economies mean that alliances between the third sector and private enterprise are no longer just “nice to have,” but have become a strategic component of development.

Companies operate where their employees and customers live. If communities face inequality, violence, or a lack of opportunities, this deterioration is reflected in these companies’ productivity, costs, and ability to grow. Hence, the importance for the Puerto Rico Chamber of Commerce (PRCC) to prioritize among its strategies the strengthening of ties that unite companies with organizations of the third sector.

“When we think about the role of the Chamber of Commerce as a voice and action for the business sector, we see that voice and action focused on economic growth, but we often overlook the fact that the nonprofit sector is also an engine of economic growth for the island,” says Glorymar Rivera Báez, head of the PRCC’s Third Sector Council.

The Third Sector Council seeks to open a direct line of communication with Puerto Rico’s non-profit organizations in order to share information and training, highlight the impact of third sector groups, and connect them with business management. The premise is simple: there is no sustainable economic prosperity without social progress.

Why these partnerships matter

Research in organizational development confirms that companies with solid social responsibility strategies show greater employee satisfaction and retention. Increasingly, employment seekers are asking during their interviews what the company does for its community and are looking for corporate values congruent with their own, like volunteering, projects with impact, and consistent environmental practices. So, having clear social responsibility programs helps companies build a sense of belonging and improve employee retention by aligning with employees’ values and creating a positive work environment.

“Also, customers are increasingly aware and make a different assessment of the brands they are going to be sponsoring or promoting. They evaluate what social responsibility practices are, whether they are environmental or giving back to the community. They are looking to support companies aligned with their values,” adds Rivera, president and CEO of the United Way of Puerto Rico.

However, that positioning can no longer be just for image effects. Commitments must be authentic for the impact to be positive. “When there is coherence, social responsibility policies strengthen a company's positioning, loyalty and, ultimately, sales. When there is a disconnect between what is said and what is done, credibility is eroded and the brand pays the bill," says Rivera.

She stresses that part of the importance of initiatives such as PRCC's Third Sector Council is that it helps companies to create alliances with these organizations, reducing the burden that this may have in economic terms.

"These organizations know the needs of communities and key allies; they can increase the scope of initiatives, which would otherwise be very onerous for a company acting alone," she points out.

Rivera points out that as Puerto Rico has faced a reduction in the size of its government and public policies have changed, the number of non-profit organizations has increased to fill the needs that have been left unmet. According to a study by Filantropía Puerto Rico released in 2022, the growth of third sector organizations has increased exponentially from 4,347 in 2002 to 13,863 in 2022.

That same study highlights the fact that the third sector contributes 15% of employment to the economy and around 5.6% of the gross national product.

"These figures dismantle the idea that the third sector is an accessory: it is an economic and public policy actor that supports critical areas such as education, health and food security," says Rivera.

From discourse to management: what is already happening

Two years ago, the PRCC – through the Quality-of-Life Committee – carried out a pioneering study to understand the profile of companies with social responsibility initiatives, their plans, priorities, internal initiatives (staff well-being), and external initiatives (community impact), linked to the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals. The research culminated in a forum that integrated good practices and success stories. As a collateral result, the institutional agenda of the Chamber more forcefully incorporated social issues (education, health, security) in past and current presidential plans.

However, the study also revealed a budget gap: many companies expressed high interest and even executed initiatives, but without formal budget allocations. This poses a clear opportunity: to migrate from ancillary projects to initiatives integrated into the vision and mission of companies with budgets and infrastructure that respond to that intention.

Key moment

Rivera highlights that Puerto Rico is currently experiencing significant vulnerability due to changes in public policies at both the state and federal levels. This, coupled with the prolonged cycle of economic fragility in the country, natural disasters, and migration, makes the need to create alliances to meet the demand for services in communities imperative.

"Neither the government nor private enterprise, on their own, can absorb that pressure." The response, Rivera stresses, must be integrated, agile, and based on shared goals: prosperity, well-being, and a quality of life that encourages those who are here to stay, and those who left, to return. 🌍

Short-term proposals

💡 Educational event – to provide guidance to third sector organizations on changes at the federal level (budget processes, categories of impact on Puerto Rico) and strengthen strategies together with the private sector and local government. Objective: to sustain work agendas and multiply alliances.

📄 Re-edition of the study of the profile of companies with social responsibility initiatives – to update the diagnosis of Puerto Rican companies, in light of the new situation. The information must be aimed at promoting concrete actions and strengthening the company-third sector linkage.

👥+ Broaden the representation base by adding key actors from across the Puerto Rican archipelago and priority sectors.

INDUSTRY BRIEFING

The construction and real estate industries in Puerto Rico show resilience despite increasing costs of construction materials and financing. During the first eight months of 2025, the Coincident Construction Index rose 4.8%, outpacing the 1.5% gain registered in the same period of 2024, according to economist Ángel Rivera-Montañez, a former Puerto Rico Planning Board (PRPB) analyst who prepares the index for San Juan-based consulting firm Stratsol Inc. Still, rising costs for metals, wood and cement, with recent monthly increases of 3% to 7%, are affecting project budgets, Rivera-Montañez explains in a report published in November 2025, in which he notes that new 50% tariffs on steel and aluminum are fueling an additional hike in costs, leading firms to adjust timelines and adopt mitigation strategies. Construction continues to be sustained by federal hurricane reconstruction funding, although increasing mortgage rates have dampened existing housing sales. The number of newly built housing units sold in Puerto Rico rose by 30% between 2023 and 2024, when 1,028 units were sold, according to PRPB data. Sales of 94-lb. bags of cement increased by 5.8% between fiscal years 2024 and 2025 to 15.2 million. However, sales of existing housing units fell 10.6% between 2023 and 2024 to 8,967 – a figure that is, in turn, 28.5% lower than the decade high of 12,542 units sold in 2021. Construction figures for the 2020s are still short of those of the 2000s, when, for example, sales of 94-lb. bags of cement averaged about 40 million a year. Meanwhile, personal consumption expenditures in housing grew 6.9%, from $10.7 billion in fiscal year 2023 to $11.4 billion in fiscal year 2024, PRPB reported.

INDUSTRY BRIEFING

Puerto Rico’s service sector includes the work of professionals and workers in fields ranging from accounting, law, marketing, human resources, consulting, technical and scientific services to cleaning, printing and security services. According to the Puerto Rico Planning Board, following the North American Industry Classification System (NAICS), the economic sectors classified as “professional, scientific and technical services;” “administrative services and support;” “management of companies and enterprises;” and “other services” generated $7.6 billion in gross domestic product (GDP) during the fiscal year ending June 30, 2024, or 6% of the island’s total GDP. The fiscal year 2024 figure is 5.1% greater than the $7.2 billion generated by these service sectors the previous fiscal year 2023. The largest of these service sectors is “professional, scientific and technical services;” which generated $4.3 billion for the island’s economy in fiscal year 2024. These service sectors generated a total of $5.1 billion in compensation for employees in fiscal 2024.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistic’s May 2024 Occupational Employment and Wage Estimates report, one of the highest paid service professions in Puerto Rico was executive director, with 2,340 employees earning an average annual salary of $120,050, followed by sales managers, making up 1,610 employees earning an average $104,820 a year. In contrast, the island’s estimated 27,440 security guards and 20,360 customer service representatives earned average annual salaries of $21,190 and $26,730, respectively. 🙄

Educational services – which include everything related to public and private schools, universities and technical institutes -- constitute a major driver of Puerto Rico’s economy. Personal consumption expenditures in the education sector on the island amounted to an estimated $2.24 billion during the fiscal year that ended on June 30, 2024, which is 5.8% higher than the $2.11 billion in expenditures during fiscal year 2023, according to the Puerto Rico Planning Board. The Puerto Rico Department of Education (DEPR) reported an enrollment of approximately 220,000 students in 856 public schools during the 2025-26 school year. Meanwhile, some 107,129 students were enrolled in nearly 600-licensed private schools during the 2023-24 school year, according to the most recent data from the Puerto Rico State Department (PRSD). During the 2022-23 school year, there were 25,853 students enrolled in nearly 200 licensed postsecondary technical vocational institutions in Puerto Rico. Most of these students were enrolled in programs offering studies in “personal and culinary services” (43%), “mechanics and equipment repair” (13.9%), “health professions and related programs” (13.4%), and “construction trades” (9.1%), according to PRSD-collected data. More than half, 52%, of students enrolled in these institutions were female. Meanwhile, the University of Puerto Rico (UPR), the island’s flagship institution of higher education, was ranked the best university among 24 Caribbean universities evaluated by the prestigious QS World University Rankings, which placed the UPR in 38th place in Latin America. Meanwhile, the Inter-American University of Puerto Rico, the Polytechnic University of Puerto Rico, and the Pontifical Catholic University of Puerto Rico ranked among the top 20 in the region. 😊

Puerto Rico’s insurance industry is one of the main pillars of local economic activity, with $22.01 billion in written premiums in 2024, a figure that constitutes 17.5% of the island’s gross domestic product for that year, according to the latest annual report of the Office of the Puerto Rico Insurance Commissioner (OPRIC). The volume of premiums written by insurers has increased steadily over the last few years, growing 7% between 2024 and 2023, and rising 37% in the last five years. Disability and health insurers underwrote the vast majority of premiums – $15.9 billion or 72% of all local written premiums in 2024. Meanwhile, property and casualty insurers underwrote $3.5 billion in premiums, or 15.9% of total premiums, and life insurance and annuity companies underwrote $2.63 billion in premiums, or 12% of the total. OPRIC’s report notes that domestic insurers and healthcare service organizations underwrote 90% of the premiums for 2024. Federal funding covers 64 percent of lives insured by health plans on the island, mostly in the Plan Vital program for the medically indigent, operated by Puerto Rico’s Health Insurance Administration (ASES, by its Spanish initials), which uses Medicaid and local funding to purchase coverage from private insurers. The industry is also buoyed by Medicare Advantage plans covering most of the island’s older adults. Meanwhile, Hospital El Maestro closed permanently in August 2025 after filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy with nearly $40 million in debt. The closure was ordered by the Puerto Rico Department of Health due to safety concerns stemming from the hospital’s unauthorized reduction of services and bed closures. The Hope Medical Center in Humacao also shut its doors in December 2025.

MEDX MEDICAL EXPERIENCE

RECIBE OCHO RECONOCIMIENTOS DE CALIDAD

Ocho galardones en un solo año confirman que Medical Experience by Migrant está entre la élite de los Centros de Salud 330 en Estados Unidos y sus territorios. La Administración de Recursos y Servicios de Salud (HRSA) le otorgó esta histórica cantidad de premios en la más reciente edición de los Quality Improvement Awards, que distinguen la excelencia clínica, el acceso a servicios y el manejo eficiente de recursos en salud primaria.

"Medical Experience obtuvo premios en Salud Conductual, Diabetes y Salud Cardiovascular, superando las metas nacionales en prevención, detección y manejo de enfermedades crónicas: un logro que nos coloca entre la élite de los centros de salud en Estados Unidos", indicó su directora ejecutiva, la doctora Tania Rodríguez. "Además, recibimos la Insignia Oro de Líder en Calidad, un reconocimiento exclusivo otorgado solo al 10% de los mejores centros a nivel nacional, gracias a nuestro alto rendimiento en calidad clínica y servicios", añadió.

Asimismo, Medical Experience by Migrant fue distinguido en Salud Preventiva, por su labor en detección temprana y educación en estilos de vida saludables, y en Cuidado de Gran Valor (High-Value Care), por combinar atención de alta calidad con un manejo eficiente de los recursos.

"Completando la lista de logros, nuestras clínicas recibieron el premio por Mejorar el Acceso al Cuidado de la Salud, que reconoce la ampliación de servicios y cobertura a más pacientes, así como la distinción por Avanzar la Tecnología de Información en Salud (HIT), que valora la incorporación de la telesalud, el intercambio ágil de datos clínicos y el uso de herramientas digitales para optimizar la atención", expresó la directora ejecutiva.

"Estos reconocimientos confirman el compromiso de Medical Experience by Migrant con la excelencia en el cuidado de la salud y reflejan el impacto positivo de su labor en las comunidades que sirve en la región oeste de Puerto Rico", finalizó diciendo la doctora Rodríguez.

Sobre HRSA y los Premios de Calidad

La HRSA reconoce anualmente a los centros de salud que logran o superan las metas nacionales en calidad clínica, acceso, salud poblacional y manejo eficiente de recursos, utilizando los datos más recientes del Uniform Data System (UDS).

MEDX, el nuevo nombre de marca de Migrant Health Center, es una corporación sin fines de lucro de salud comunitaria que provee acceso y servicios médicos de manera integrada en gran parte de la región oeste y sur del país. MEDX ofrece servicios a todos los pacientes, independientemente de su capacidad de pago, a través de instalaciones y clínicas 330 ubicadas en Mayagüez, Guánica, Yauco, Isabela, Lajas, San Sebastián, Maricao, Las Marías, Cabo Rojo, Sabana Grande, San Germán y su División de Proyectos Especiales.

Actualmente, cuenta con 16 clínicas en el área oeste y suroeste. Además, operan diez laboratorios y ocho farmacias, con un equipo compuesto por más de 67 médicos y sobre 600 empleados.

Premiados por servir con excelencia. MEDX, tu salud es nuestra prioridad.

INDUSTRY BRIEFING

Retail trade and wholesale trade together constitute the third largest sector of Puerto Rico's economy, producing a combined $12.04 billion for the island's economy, or about 10 percent of the local gross domestic product (GDP) during the fiscal year ending June 30, 2024, according to the Puerto Rico Planning Board. Retail trade alone produced $8.24 billion in economic output as measured by the GDP, while wholesale trade produced $3.8 billion. The combined figure represents an increase of 6.3% when compared to the fiscal year 2023 figure of $11.33 billion. Meanwhile, retail sales in fiscal year 2024 reached $39.66 billion at current prices, representing a 3.8% increase compared to the $38.22 billion figure for fiscal year 2023, according to the Department of Economic Development and Commerce. The largest retail sectors in fiscal year 2024 were general merchandise stores, which generated $13.8 billion in sales; food and beverage stores, which generated $5.6 billion in sales; and motor vehicle and parts dealers, which generated $5.2 billion in sales. The sectors with the fastest growing sales in fiscal year 2024 were electronics and appliance stores, whose sales rose by 27.8% to $1.7 billion; food services and drinking places, whose sales increased by 7.1% to $2.8 billion; and general merchandise stores, whose sales rose by 6.5%. The sectors with the steepest losses in sales in fiscal 2024 were sporting goods, hobby, musical instruments and book stores, with a 10% decrease in sales to $243.5 million; lawn and garden equipment supplies stores, with a 8.2% drop in sales to $65.8 million; and gasoline stations and fuel dealers, which saw a combined sales decrease by 6.5% to $3.1 billion. 🙄

Puerto Rico's banking and financing industry, a major driver of the local economy, continued to show strength in 2025, as indicated by its robust profitability, solid capital positions, and high investor confidence. Despite the overall economy's mixed signals, quarterly results from major institutions like Banco Popular, FirstBanCorp, and OFG Bancorp demonstrated the healthy state of the banking sector, which has benefitted from disciplined credit management and digital transformation efforts. Domestic commercial banks generated earnings of $783.8 million in 2024 -- up 17.7% from the $665.7 million in earnings reported in 2023, but 18.8% lower than the decade high of $965.1 million in earnings in 2022, according to data collected by the Office of the Commissioner of Financial Institutions (OCIF). The value of total assets of all financial institutions in Puerto Rico amounted to $180.6 billion as of the first quarter of 2025, of which 45.2% was held by commercial banks and 43.1% was held by international banking entities. While the value of the local mortgage loan portfolio fell from a decade high of $15 billion in 2015 to about $11 billion in 2025, the auto loan portfolio value nearly doubled from $5.7 billion to $10.5 billion during the same period, according to OCIF. Meanwhile, the island's 91 credit unions and cooperative savings institutions increased their assets by 9.3 percent between 2021's $11.4 billion to $12.4 billion as of Sept. 30, 2025, according to the Public Corporation for the Supervision and Insurance of Cooperatives (COSSEC by its Spanish initials), which reported that the sector's indivisible capital reserve, an indicator of long-term financial strength, increased 11.4%, from $367 million to $409 million during the same period. 📈

LUMA Energy LLC, which took over the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority's (Prepa) transmission and distribution system and customer services in 2021, submitted a quarterly report to the Puerto Rico Energy Bureau in November 2025, which states that as of Sept. 30, 2025 more than 179,900 customers have been connected to the utility's net metering program, which allows customers with renewable energy systems to receive credits for produced excess energy fed into the grid. The figure, which makes up about 12 percent of the utility's 1.5 million customers, represents a dramatic increase when compared to the 29,282 net metering customers as of June 2021.

Distributed generation (DG)—the generation of electricity from small-scale power sources located at or near the point of consumption, rather than from large, centralized power plants—now totals 1,335 megawatts in Puerto Rico, according to the LUMA Energy report, which notes that over 12,400 new DG activations (mostly residential) were completed during the quarter ending Sept. 30, propelling the island to first place in per capita distributed generation system activations in the United States, as measured by the Energy Information Administration. Approximately 99.9% of new net metering connections were processed “expeditiously” (within 30 days), with an average completion time of 14 days for these cases, according to the report. DG made up 40% of all megawatt hours of renewable energy acquired by LUMA Energy during the quarter ending June 30, 2025, with the rest, 59.5%, purchased from utility-scale solar, wind and landfill-powered systems. Meanwhile, Sunnova Energy International, Inc., one of the major installers of solar panel systems on the island, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in June 2025. ☹️

Manufacturing and production are Puerto Rico's largest industrial sector, generating $55.6 billion in gross domestic product during the fiscal year ending June 30, 2024, and making up 44% of the island's economy. Pharmaceutical and medical device products constitute most manufacturing on the island. While production and manufacturing slumped during the early part of 2025, the industry turned around later in the year, in part, due to increased tariffs place by President Trump on goods coming from U.S. competitors such as China, according to Puerto Rico Economic Development and Commerce Secretary Sebastián Negrón Reichard, who told BizData Book that Puerto Rico's exports totaled $37.9 billion between January and July 2025, an increase of 7.2 percent over the same period the previous year.

Negrón said that as of September 2025, the government had received commitments from pharmaceutical and medical device companies such as Stryker Puerto Rico, LLC; AbbVie; Viant Puerto Rico, Inc.; and Amgen to create 3,000 new jobs and invest $1 billion in Puerto Rico. In October 2025, Eli Lilly and Co. announced a planned investment of more than $1.2 billion to expand and modernize its

Lilly del Caribe manufacturing site in Carolina, which would create 100 jobs. The plans include integration of advanced technologies and expansion of production capacity to support the company's growing portfolio of oral solid medicines in cardiometabolic health, neuroscience, oncology and immunology, including production of the first tablet to treat obesity. Meanwhile, in July and August 2025, Peru-based

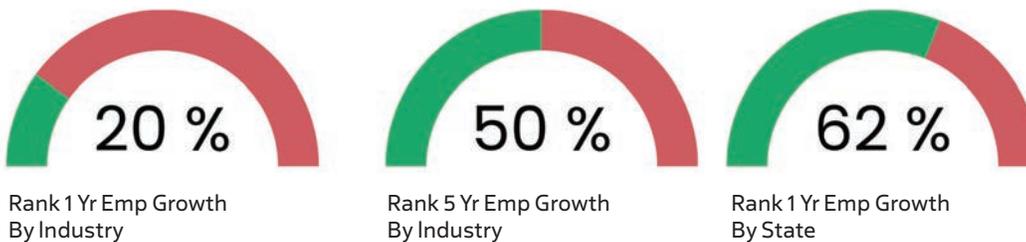

Grupo Gloria liquidated its Suiza Dairy assets in Puerto Rico by selling the Suiza brand name, distribution network and Aguadilla plant to the owners of Coca Cola Puerto Rico for $25 million, while local entrepreneurs organized under 2 Squared LLC acquired Suiza facilities in Río Piedras and Ponce. 🤖

Puerto Rico is a key regional supply chain and logistics center for the Caribbean and the Americas. As a manufacturing and shipping hub, the island has built up an infrastructure to efficiently bring in raw materials and ship out finished products to U.S. and international markets. This includes supply chain mastery in handling, storing, and shipping time and temperature-sensitive materials to over 85 countries worldwide. During the fiscal year that ended June 30, 2025, Puerto Rico imported $56.4 billion worth of goods, of which 34% consisted of pharmaceutical and medical products. Most of these imports (63%) originated in the U.S. states, while another 9% of imports came from other pharma manufacturing hubs such as Ireland and Singapore, according to data collected by the Puerto Rico Statistics Institute. During the same period, the island exported $60.7 billion worth of goods –82% of which were pharmaceutical and medical device products. The main destinations for Puerto Rico’s exports were the U.S. states, which received 68.1% of the exported goods, followed by countries such as Spain, the Netherlands, Japan, Italy, Brazil, Belgium, China, the Dominican Republic, and Mexico. Puerto Rico’s supply chain and logistics infrastructure is being upgraded as a result of efforts to use a federal waiver exempting the island’s international airports from certain air cabotage regulations to turn the island into an air cargo transshipment hub specializing in pharmaceutical and medical cargo, as well as a transshipment point for air carriers flying from Europe to Latin America. Moreover, manufacturers and shippers have the option of using the island’s designated foreign trade zones to store or process raw materials, components, and finished goods within a zone while deferring or eliminating customs duties of such merchandise if shipped to non-U.S. destinations. 🌐

Puerto Rico's $3.2 billion telecommunications industry is expanding beyond basic phone and internet services by offering bundled packages of multiple services to increase customer value and revenue. According to the Puerto Rico Telecommunications Bureau (PRTB), 80.4% of telecommunication companies' earnings in 2024 came from "expanded services," which consist of packages of multiple services, such as internet, TV, and phone, offered by a single provider under a single bill. This strategic shift is happening in a competitive market where companies like Claro, T-Mobile, and Liberty are major players. The industry is also growing in size and sophistication, with substantial investments being made in areas like 5G expansion. A 2025 Inteligencia Económica report commissioned by the Puerto Rican Telecommunications Alliance found that between 2020 and 2025, telecommunications companies invested about $3.5 billion in infrastructure and digital services, including $2.62 billion in private capital. The report found that telecommunications contribute between 2.5% and 3% of Puerto Rico's gross domestic product and have generated about 32,000 indirect and induced jobs over the past five years. Still, industry jobs stood at 6,486 as of August 2025, down from a high of 9,154 in 2016, according to PRTB. Internet connections have grown markedly over the past decade – from 2.8 million subscribers in 2015 to 4.3 million subscribers in 2025, according to the industry regulator. Meanwhile, in August 2025, Gov. Jenniffer González-Colón vetoed Senate Bill 615, which would have allowed municipalities to expand taxation of telecommunications services and infrastructure. The bill faced stiff opposition from the island's private sector. 😞

Tourism and leisure constitute fastest growing economic sector in Puerto Rico. Not only has the sector recovered from the disastrous blows of the 2017 hurricanes and the earthquakes and Covid-19 pandemic of 2020, but has surpassed pre-pandemic levels in jobs, spending and investment. Direct tourism spending in Puerto Rico amounted to $11.6 billion during calendar year 2024, including $11.5 billion in visitor spending and $100 million in cruise-related spending, according to a report issued by Tourism Economics, an Oxford Economics Company, which was commissioned by Discovery Puerto Rico, the island's destination marketing organization. By contrast, visitor spending was $6.4 billion in 2019 and $4 billion in 2020.

In 2024, Puerto Rico received 7.5 million visitors and hosted 4.2 million residents, for a grand total of 11.7 million tourists, which, according to the Tourism Economics study, contrasts with the total of 8.3 million visitors in 2019 and 4.9 million visitors in 2020. Passenger arrivals at San Juan's Luis Muñoz Marín International Airport totaled 4.3 million during the first seven months of 2025 in contrast to the 2.8 million during the similar period in 2019.

The food and beverage industry benefited the most from visitor spending, with approximately $4.6 billion in total output in 2024, according to the study. Lodging and air transport followed, with $2.1 billion and $1.9 billion in total output, respectively. The study found that the visitor economy is the third-largest private sector employer in Puerto Rico on the basis of direct tourism employment, generating more than 91,000 direct jobs, representing approximately 9.6% of all employment in Puerto Rico. In total, it supports directly and indirectly 141,000 jobs on the island.

The tourism and hospitality sectors received a boost in 2025 from the "No Me Quiero Ir de Aquí" series of 31 concerts held by rapper artist Bad Bunny at the José Miguel Agrelot Puerto Rico Coliseum between July 11 and September 14, which generated an estimated $200 million in direct economic activity. A NielsenIQ study concluded that the cultural event reversed a year-long decline in consumer spending. 🎵
